LITTLE THINGS Worth Knowing

In Quito, Ecuador, it is usual to uncover one's head when there is a flash of lightning. This is probably a relic of fire-worshiping days.

An old man named Kuss was buried in Egregy, Hungary, with his fortune of $17,000 in his coffin. His relatives heard of it and exhumed his body and divided the money.

A Paris bicycle thief who had stolen a bicycle belonging to a M. Marcel Brunard, was impaled on a mechanical poniard which the owner had concealed in the saddle of the machine for such emergencies.

An egg with a perfect yolk and containing another egg about the size of a linnet's egg, which also had a good shell and was perfect, has been laid by a hen belonging to a Swindon (England) tradesman.

Many curious instances of old laws may still be found in England. In Chester the man who fails to raise his hat when a funeral is passing becomes liable by an old law to be taken before a magistrate and imprisoned.

Organ grinders in Vervieres, Belgium, are by law compelled to appear every morning before the police superintendent and play their instruments. The organs which chance to be out of tune must be set in order before a license to play on the streets will be granted.

The following is an official report sent to his superior by the station master at Nimba, on the Uganda Railway: "To station Nairobi, from station Venani. From station master. Guard No. 2 reports struck giraffe at mile 158. No damage to permanent way or train. Driver states giraffe ran off uninjured."

A difference of opinion seems to have risen over the effect of firing a candle at a board. For a long time the ancient tradition has held its own that a soft tallow hurled at the mark by a musket would put a hole through an ordinary plank. Yet here comes a gunbearer who declares that he has tried the experiment and finds the material of the candle wildly scattered upon the target. Of course, with present-day rifles and brechloaders it may not be possible to discharge a candle effectively from a military arm or from the latest style of sporting guns. But it would certainly be a pity to leave the question unsolved.

THE ALASKAN MOOSE.

Wonderful Antlers of This Northern Beast of the Wilds.

After all has been said about the horns of the world's greatest horned animals, there are positively none that equal in impressiveness the gigantic mass that crowns the head of a really big Alaskan moose. Take them in situ, as the geologists say, on the head of their rightful owner, and in length, breadth and thickness they inspire in the mind of every intelligent human being a feeling of genuine awe. I do not see how even an intelligent dog or horse can behold a pair of seventy-inch moose antlers without being profoundly impressed. The antler springs horizontally from an upper corner of the head, on a stem of solid bone that is like the trunk of a hickory sapling. A foot or so from the burr it throws off toward the front, quite gratuitously as it were, two or three big spears of bone that are of much use in a fight. As soon as there is room for real development, the main stem flattens out into an enormous slab of bone, perhaps two inches in thickness, from twelve to eighteen inches wide, and from two to three feet long. This is the "palmation," and a very appropriate name it is, too; for in the centre it is hollowed like a human palm, and studded along its upper edge with from six to twelve fingers and thumbs of solid bone.

In sheer exuberance of strength, and excess of horn material, an Alaskan moose antler occasionally throws off from the lower surface of its palm, or it may be from the front of the beam, a big, rugged spur-root of bone, which always has an extra-impressive effect on the beholder. The largest antlers of Alaskan moose are in the Field Museum, at Chicago. They have a spread of seventy-eight and one-half inches, and weigh ninety-three and one-half pounds.—From "Heads and Horns," by W. T. Hornaday, in Scribner's.

Talents and Confidence.

A single-talent man, supported by great self-confidence will achieve more than a ten-talent man who does not believe in himself. The mind cannot act with vigor in the presence of doubt. A wavering mind makes a wavering execution. There must be certainty, confidence and assurance, or there can be no efficiency. An uneducated man who believes in himself, and who has faith that he can do the thing he undertakes, often puts to shame the average college-bred man, whose overculture and wider outlook have sometimes bred increased sensitiveness and a lessening of self-confidence, whose decision has been weakened by constant weighing of conflicting theories and whose prejudices are always open to conviction.—Success.

Only American Life Guard.

Marshall Roberts occupies the more or less enviable position of being the only native born American who ever became an officer in the British Life Guards.

Clay as a Fire Kindler.

W. S. Blatchley, State Geologist of Indiana, in his annual reports, gives details regarding the use of refractory clay for the purpose of kindling fires. The clay is mixed with one-half of its bulk of sawdust, then molded into an oval mass a little larger than a hen's egg, and with four grooves running lengthwise. The solid thus formed is then burned, and in the process of burning the sawdust is destroyed, leaving a porous mass of fire-clay of great refractoriness. A handle of copper wire is attached to this by an ingenious machine, and the fire kindler is complete. This, when dipped into a can of coal tar and allowed to remain over night, absorbs enough oil to burn for fifteen or twenty minutes, with a flame sufficient to kindle either coal or wood fires.—Evening Post.

"Nobody loves a fat man, anyway," observes the Hon. John L. Sullivan when the sheriff closed his fifty-fourth saloon. Mr. Sullivan threw too much emphasis on what was only one among the causes of his declining popularity, maintains Collier's Weekly. The disappearance of comely outlines in his body weighed less with the fickle public than the loss of his ability to plant his fist upon a fellow-being's jaw with such momentum that the aforesaid man and brother would instantaneously cease to feel or think.

It Pays, An Ad In This Paper

THE PULPIT.

A SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. DR. FRANK O. HALL.

Subject: The Spirit Beareth Witness.

New York City.—Dr. Frank Oliver Hall, pastor of the Church of the Divine Paternity, preached Sunday morning on "The Spirit Beareth Witness." He chose his text from Romans viii:18: "The spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." Dr. Hall said:

It is easy to build an argument for the existence of God. The process of reasoning may be briefly stated thus:

We are compelled to think that there can be no effect without a cause. But if we trace an effect back to its cause and find this in turn to be an effect, then trace that back to its cause and find that also to be an effect, we must at length predicate the existence of an adequate cause for all phenomena, an underlying and eternal reality.

Or you may put the argument in this way:

No thought without a thinker.

There is thought in the universe.

Therefore there is a thinker in the universe.

As the universe is practically infinite we must believe that in and through the universe lives an Infinite Thinker, and inasmuch as we cannot conceive of an impersonal thinker we must conceive of God as a personal being. To be sure, our words are inadequate to express the qualities of the Divine Life. As the heavens are high above the earth so are His thoughts higher than our thoughts. The mode of His existence may be infinitely higher than what we name personality. But these are the best words at our command. We are obliged to use them or nothing. So we have a right to say that God is an intelligent personality.

You may find such arguments elaborated at great length in scores of learned books on theology and theism. But when you have read them and agreed with the conclusion, what does it amount to? Very likely men and women have come along this dreary pathway of logic to the more beautiful realm of faith, but I am convinced that a mere intellectual belief in God is practically worthless. Ninety-nine out of every hundred convicts in our states' prisons believe in God. James states the case still stronger. "Dost thou believe in God? The devils also believe and tremble." There is neither comfort nor strength nor enthusiasm in a mere intellectual belief in the existence of God.

One may find an intellectual delight in listening to a clear and convincing argument for theism as he might in listening to some skilled mathematical talk about geometry. But something more is necessary. Every one of us knows what it is to long for the consciousness of a personal relationship with God the Father. "O God," cried Augustine, "Thou hast made me for Thyself and I cannot rest until I rest in Thee." O, to know God personally; to come into touch with Him; to feel His love and His pity; to be able to say, "Within Thy circling arms I lie," and feel the sentiment of the words; to know that He is my Father and my friend! O, to have His Spirit bear witness with our spirits that we are children of God!

Now, one can no more gain this consciousness or the power that comes from this thought by a mere exercise of the reasoning faculties, than he can learn to love Tennyson by going through the process of counting the number of words or letters in his complete works. One might gain a certain intellectual satisfaction in doing that. But if you are really to get good from Tennyson, then his spirit must bear witness with your spirit; that is, his thought and his sentiment must meet a response in you. So, if God is to be an ever present help in trouble, a staff for the hand and a guide for weary feet, then one must have something more than a mere intellectual belief in His existence. What the world needs, what each one of us needs, is not so much an intellectual assurance of God's existence as spiritual assurance of His personal relationship to us as His children.

I know that I am appealing to common experience and a common longing. Not one of us who does not know what it is to desire with a mighty yearning for a personal assurance of the love of God. What are we, after all, but children?

> But what am I?
> An infant crying in the night;
> An infant crying for a light
> And with no language but a cry.

Just as the child wakes in the night and, feeling the blackness huge and empty about him, cries out into the gloom for companionship and love, and the father comes and takes the child in his arms and, with confident voice, soothes away the childish fears, so oftentimes we children of earth feel the darkness of life oppress our souls and cry out for the strong arms of a heavenly Father. Why should we be ashamed to acknowledge this hunger of the soul any more than we are ashamed to acknowledge the hunger of the body? How, especially in the midst of trouble, the heart hungers for its Father. When the clods fall upon the coffin lid, how the soul cries, "My God—my God." How, when the clouds of adversity gather dense—when the cherished ambitions of a lifetime prove futile; when the fortune which was to make the years of old age bright takes to itself wings; how, when the familiar friend lifts up his heel against one—the heart cries out, "Oh, God—my God!" And even in the sunshine and the joy of life, when everything seems to be bright and beautiful and full of promise of future joy, there will come moments when it all seems empty and meaningless and the soul cries out for God.

My memory goes back to my own young manhood, and I recall a day that was more than usually beautiful, when I stood alone by the sea. I had every reason to be happy. I had found my place in the world; had a work to do and the future seemed full of promise. My health was perfect, and I had not been disappointed, even in my boyish dreams. And yet I recall the awful loneliness and emptiness of the hour. I had but to walk a mile to be welcomed by true and tried friends. But I stood there, lonely and homesick. There flashed into my mind the dreary words:

> O we poor children of nothing, alone on this lonely shore,
> Born of a brainless nature who knew not that which she bore.

And I remember that I threw myself on the grass there, with the sunshine all over me and birds singing about me, with everything, apparently, to make me happy, in the depth of my loneliness I felt like a child who had lost its mother. What more did I want? I will tell you what I wanted—what you want, what every man and woman hungers for with a hunger deeper than any physical longing. I wanted His Spirit to bear witness with my spirit that I was a child of Go. Nothing else could satisfy; nothing else ever can satisfy the deep hunger of the human heart.

One might say that such a youth was abnormal, insane, if this were an extraordinary experience, but is an experience common to us all. Here is a song composed by some unknown singer 4000 years ago, a singer of a different race, in a far away land, under entirely different circumstances from those in which we live, but this song has been taken up and repeated by millions of human beings because the words express the ever recurrent sentiment of the human soul in all ages and all lands. "As the hart panteth for the water brooks so panteth my soul after Thee, O God." You shall find this sentiment expressed in ten thousand hymns. In a million churches on this Sunday morning it is being sung. In a million mosques it is being chanted. In a million Buddhist temples it is being uttered. All around the earth all classes and conditions of men, rich and poor, wise and foolish, good and bad, high and low, are longing and praying to have His Spirit bear witness with their spirits that they are children of God.

And not only do the people who believe in God testify to this. The most remarkable and pathetic testimony comes from those who intellectually deny that there is sufficient reason to believe in the existence of God. It seems to me that almost the wreariest words that ever fell from human lips were uttered by Professor Clifford when he felt himself compelled intellectually to take the atheistic position. "I have seen the spring sun shine out of the empty heavens upon a soulless earth, and have felt with utter loneliness that the great Companion was dead." And you will remember that Professor Romanes, though at the last he saw a great light and went to his death full of trust "like one who wraps the drapery of his couch about him and lies down to pleasant dreams," at one time wrote a book called "A Candid Examination of Theism," and in this examination found no rational ground for a belief in God. He closed his book with these words: "I am not ashamed to confess that with this virtual denial of God the universe has lost its soul and loveliness, and when at times I think, as think at times I must, of the appalling contrast between the hallowed glory of the creed that once was mine and the lonely mystery of existence as now I find it, at such times it will ever be impossible to avoid the sharpest pangs of which my nature is susceptible." Take note of these words of an absolutely sincere and fearless man, "The sharpest pangs of which my nature is susceptible."

Now why should one feel like that? Suppose there is no God, what of it? Suppose it should be proved that this world has been produced by the operation of physical forces working in accordance with blind and heartless law, what of it? Is not the sky just as blue, the grass as green? Are not friends as dear? Why should we not get along without God? Why should we care whether God is or is not?

A friend told me this incident the other day: There was a family consisting of an aged man and woman, a number of sons and daughters and a little group of grandchildren. The aged grandfather was enjoying a serene and happy old age, loved by all, and the home was one of peculiar brightness. One night the aged man, as usual, took his evening paper and sat in his accustomed place to read, wiped his glasses, made a comment or two to the white haired wife knitting opposite, and after a little, as his custom was, fell into one of those quiet slumbers peculiar to old age. Around him the other members of the family talked and laughed and joked till one said, "Father seems to be sleeping very soundly," and, placing his hand upon the old man's shoulder, discovered that he was dead. Now, ask me, will you, what difference is made? The home was left, the lamp burned as brightly, the newspaper filled with interest was there, nothing was apparently changed. Was not the sky just as blue and the grass just as green and did not the stars shine as brightly? What difference did it make? Why, if he was dead his spirit could no longer bear witness to the spirit of the aged wife that he loved her. His spirit could no longer respond to the joy of his grandchildren. There is a difference between a dead body and a living man that makes one stand in the presence of his living friend with joy and in the presence of the friend's dead body with unutterable misery. There is a difference between a dead universe and a living universe. That is the reason for these utterances of black despair from those who do not believe in God.

"My soul longeth—yea, even fainteth—for the courts of the Lord."

Now I want to call your attention to the testimony of this hunger after God, to the existence of God. Whence came this universal and insatiable desire? It came from the same source as the mighty longing of a woman for a child, the longing of the child for a mother's love. It was wrought into man by the same power that makes the man search through the world for the one woman to whom he can give himself in love; by the same power that makes the maiden desire above everything else the love of one strong man. All these are wrought by nature into human nature. David was right and his analogy was complete. "As the hart panteth after the water brooks so panteth my soul after Thee, O God." As the thirst of the hart for water, as the fact that the hart suffers and dies without water, is testimony enough for him that somewhere there must exist water to satisfy his thirst, so the thirst of the human soul for God, this mighty cry that goes up from every human soul, is inexplicable except upon the ground that God is and that somehow His spirit can bear witness with our spirits that we are children of God. When you have convinced me that the love of man for woman, of mother for child is without meaning or purpose then I will believe that this longing of the human soul for God is not to be trusted. Until that time I know that I have evidence in myself that God is and that I am related to Him. May we not trust this deepest and divinest instinct of human nature? If not, what can we trust?

You tell me that you will trust your eyesight. But why? If the thought of God is a delusion, why may not the whole visible universe be a delusion? If my instinctive outreaching after that which is holy is a lie, why may not what I seem to see be another lie? You say that you will trust your reason? May not that also be another delusion? "Two times two are four," you say, "always have been, always will be." But how do you know? Have you any right from your own petty experience to assume that something was true a million years ago and will be true a million years hence? But you do assume that. You must trust your reason. Then why not trust this deeper instinct of the human soul which cries out for God and can be satisfied with nothing less? Religion is its own evidence. The man who trusts and surrenders himself to God does not need to have it proven to him that God is. His spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are children of God.

But you will say, "Prove it to me." I ask you to prove it to yourself. I cannot prove it to you. No man can. You must make the experiment for yourself. You must prove it yourself. Here is a man with his eyes bandaged tight, who cries, "You say that the sunshine is beautiful, the grass green, the roses red. Prove it to me." What will you do? There is no possible way in which you can prove the beauty of the world to this man with bandaged eyes. "Off with the bandage!" you cry. "Open your eyes and look. Trust the evidence of your own senses. Then you will believe." "How does opening the eyelids alter the relation between my eyes and the light? Why, the glorious revealing light comes in, a thing it cannot do to shut eyes. How does breathing in alter the relation of my lungs to the air? Why, it brings the air that was before outside of me inside of me. Just where I absolutely need it for very life, that is all. The open soul takes God in. The shut soul keeps God out, that is all. The immutable, eternal laws of light and air are not changed, they are illustrated thereby. The immutable love of God is not changed. Its glorious working is illustrated when the believing soul opens its gates and lets the King of Glory in.

Oh, friend, you who are hungry and thirsty and have tried in a thousand ways to find satisfaction and have found it not, make another experiment—make the supreme venture of faith. Try trusting in God to the utmost. Surrender yourself to the guidance of His divine will. I believe that thus you will find strength, comfort, satisfaction and that your faith shall prove itself in the deep experiences of your life. You want me to prove to you that prayer is effective and reasonable. I will not try. I ask you, rather, to prove it to yourself. Pray. Talk to your Father. Listen to His voice. Then you will no longer be asking for proof that prayer is effective. You will have evidence in yourself.

There is a God and He is our Father, and He reveals Himself and His love to men; not to a few men, but to all men. His spirit will bear witness with your spirit if you will open the eyes and ears of the spirit to hear and see.

Sorrows may encompass you, temptations may harass you, disappointments may come to you. Still trust, poor soul; trust as never before. Trust in the Lord and He shall bring it to pass. Cast thy burden on the Lord and He shall sustain thee. Out of the depths of the soul's experience were these words uttered. They can be proved true in the deep experience of the soul to which they appeal.

Hidden Riches.

This inner life is a tremendous reality. Its very invisibility emphasizes the realness of the reality. It is one of the richest heritages of the child of God. The outer life is only the scaffolding of the building; it is only the husk or shell. The inner life is the real building; it is the germ-hiding kernel.

All moral and spiritual defeats are due to a vitiation of the inner life. The withering, blasting and uprooting of the soul's choice plants are never accomplished through the forces of the outer life; the work begins within.

How can we possess the rich, powerful inner life when body, mind and soul are constantly exercising their energies upon the vain, perishing things of earth! We must take time to cultivate the unseen fields of the soul. We must constantly stand face to face with God, drink in the strength of His nature and the inspiration of His presence. If we do not, the inner life must perish. Prayer, meditation, reading—these are channels through which God pours His golden, vitalizing streams into the inner life.

The saddest moment in life to man or woman is when there is a discovery that the inner life is gone, and only the outer shell is left. Yet the inner life goes, gradually and secretly; no one has ever been robbed of it.

Let us be watchful. Let us remember that as long as God is in this inner life there is security there, and that no thief has ever yet been able to break the lock of prayer and trust and divine wisdom.—Raleigh Christian Advocate.

Labor's Reward.

Whatever we beg of God, let us also work for it; if the thing be matter of duty or a consequent to industry. For God loves to bless labor and to reward it. And therefore our blessed Saviour joins watchfulness with prayer; for God's graces are but assistances, not new creations of the whole habit, in every instant or period of our lives. Read Scripture and then pray to God for understanding. Pray against temptation. Ask of God competency of living; but you must also work with your own hands the things that are honest, that ye may have to supply in time of need. We can but do our endeavor and pray for a blessing, and then leave the success with God; and beyond this we cannot deliberate, we cannot take care; but so far we must. —Jeremy Taylor.

God's Will.

You may be doing God's will with one hand consecrated to Christ and making your own autobiography with the other consecrated to self.—Henry Drummond.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR NOVEMBER 12.

Subject: Ezra's Journey to Jerusalem. Ezra viii., 21-32—Golden Text, Ezra viii., 22—Memory Verses, 21-23—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. A fast proclaimed (vs. 21-23). 21. "Proclaimed a fast." Ezra entered upon his work with fasting and prayer. The journey was a dangerous one, especially with all the treasure he carried. Ezra realized the danger, but he went forward in faith. His chief concern was to have God with him. He had procured Levites to go with him (vs. 15-20), but even that would be of no avail if Jehovah did not direct their steps. "Afflict ourselves." "Humble ourselves." (R. V.) and repent of our sins. "To seek Him." Era wanted the people to commit themselves to the guidance and protection of divine providence and implore God to give them a prosperous journey. Their journey lay chiefly through the desert, and the Arabians and Samaritans were likely to attack them.

22. "I was ashamed," etc. Ezra had preached trust in God before the heathen rulers and he would not dishonor God by asking the usual military escort. He had represented God, the object of his worship, as supremely powerful, and as having the strongest affection for His true followers. Thus we see that this good man had more anxiety for the glory of God than for his own personal safety.

23. "So we fasted." The people did as Ezra commanded. God heard and answered their prayers, and they were kept in safety during the difficult and dangerous journey.

II. Ezra's charge to the priests (vs. 24-30). 24. "I separated twelve." There is a difference of opinion here as to the number of persons Ezra selected as custodians of the treasure and sacred vessels. There were probably twelve priests and twelve Levites; but some think there were twelve priests and only ten Levites. Sherebiah and Hashabiah were two of the Levites. 25. "Weighed." We may gather from this that the gold and silver were in bars or ingots, and not in coined money. 26. "Unto their hand." We have here the particular care Ezra took of the treasure of God's sanctuary. Having committed the keeping of it to God, he committed the care of it to proper men, though without God they would have watched in vain. Our prayers should always be seconded with our endeavors. Do we expect God should by His providence keep that which belongs to us? Then ought we by His grace to care for that which belongs to Him; let God's honor and interest be our care. The prophet in foretelling the return of God's people and ministers out of Babylon gave the solemn charge (Isa. 52.11), "Be ye clean that bear the vessels of the Lord." In Zerubbabel's time the vessels were delivered by number; here by weight, that it might easily appear if any were missing. This intimates that such as are intrusted with holy things are concerned to remember, both in receiving their trust and in discharging it, that they must shortly give a very particular account of, it, that they may be faithful to it and so give up their account with joy. "Silver.... gold." The whole treasure has been estimated at from four to six million dollars. A talent of silver was about $1600; gold is usually worth sixteen times as much as silver.

27. "Basons....drams." The word translated "dram" appears to be in the Hebrew representative of the Persian word which the Greek rendered by "daric." This was a gold coin, stamped with the figure of the Persian king, wearing his crown and armed with a bow and arrow. According to the most exact computation each such coin contained somewhat more pure gold than an English guinea, and was worth five dollars of our money. The "basins" would be worth about two hundred and seventy-five dollars each. "Vessels of fine copper." Probably some fictitious metal made there that took the polish and assumed the brightness of gold, and because of its hardness was more durable. There is still a metal of this kind made among the Asiatics. 28. "Freewill offering." The silver and gold were a present to the house of God that the king and his counselors had set apart.

III. The journey to Jerusalem (vs. 31, 32). 31. "We departed....on the twelfth day." The company began to form and arrange for the journey upon the first day of the month Nisan. Upon a review of his company Ezra observed the lack of Levites, and the time used in securing their union with the returning exiles, and in weighing the treasure, etc., took up the time until the twelfth day. Ahava is the name both of a small town and stream, not far from the river Euphrates. This would be a natural course to pursue from Shushan. This account of Ezra's preparation and journey is a beautiful example of method and thoroughness which is of great value in the work of God. Ezra sought first the prosperity of God's cause, but he did not count it lost time to spend twelve days in preparation for the journey. Time used for prayer is never lost time. Time consumed in perfecting plans for God's work is not misspent time. Always take time to do a thing right. Things done by half are never done well.

32. "We came to Jerusalem." The dangerous journey was completed with safety at the end of four months. "Abode....three days.' That is, they rested that long. On the fourth day the treasures were weighed and handed over to the custody of the officiating priests of the temple. The returned exiles offered burnt offerings, and Ezra delivered the royal commission to the magistrates, while the Levitical portion of the company assisted in performing the additional work which the arrival of so many new worshipers occasioned.

King Visits Workmen.

Genoa.—King Victor Emmanuel, who is here to inaugurate the new harbor works, suddenly visited the harbor Saturday morning, wishing to be in the center of the greatest activity of the country while the work was going on. The loading and unloading and transportation of stone, etc., was at the height of activity when the king appeared, and found himself in the midst of 7,000 workmen, who gave him a frantically enthusiastic reception.

SUGGESTED RELIEF FROM HAY FEVER.

Pollantine, a New German Remedy For Which Many Virtues Are Claimed—Prof. Dunbar's Tests.

An account of the experiments of Prof. Dunbar, of Hamburg, with a hay fever antitoxin is furnished by Consul-General Guenther.

Prof. Dunbar thinks that he has been able to produce an efficient antitoxin from the blood serum of horses treated with pollen toxin. This remedy is now manufactured at Niltitz upon a large scale and has been given the name of pollantine.

Its manufacture is under the control of the veterinary university at Leipsic.

A serum suitable for hypodermic injections is the object of the most recent experiments. Prof. Dunbar thinks that this, while not absolutely necessary, would be advantageous, because hay fever differs from other diseases in which specific antitoxins have been employed in that the infection takes place continually during a period of several weeks.

"A subcutaneous treatment would in such a case be desirable," says Prof. Dunbar, "if the patient thereby would be made perfectly insensible to the pollen toxin for a longer duration than say of one to two weeks. This does not seem to be possible at this time. I also had to abandon the experiments for active immunization of the hay fever patients as being wholly unsuitable in practice. Under such circumstances a mode of application had to be found possible for every patient at any time. It was therefore a pleasant surprise for me when I could show that the simple application of one drop of the serum to the conjunctiva or into the nasal canal sufficed to render these main entrances of the poison completely insensible and also to remove irritation already existing.

"In cases where the nasal canals are entirely closed the desired end will be attained by applying the pollantine repeatedly to the conjunctiva. It then acts from the lachrymal canal upon the mucous membrane of the nose. If in addition a small ball of cotton wetted or sprinkled with antitoxin is introduced into the nasal canal most afflicted it can be made perfectly free again in the course of about half an hour, and then the treatment can be applied to the other side."

A further advantageous use of the remedy was obtained by pulverizing it. In this it was found to be proof against bacteriological decomposition. Patients require about fifty grains of the remedy in powdered form to keep themselves free from attacks during an entire season. Of 505 patients treated by Dr. Luehbert, 299 used pollantine with absolutely favorable results, 143 with partial success and sixty-three with none.—New York World.

Coyote in San Francisco Business House

A coyote hunt in the centre of the business district was an unusual incident which took place in the rear of 430 Bush street yesterday morning. The place is occupied by a dyeing works, and for the past ten days the proprietor, F. Bertin, and his wife have noticed what they thought was a yellow dog apparently hiding among the rubbish heaps at the rear of the establishment.

Several of the Japanese who reside in the vicinity have noticed that their chickens have mysteriously disappeared, but no connection was made between the supposed yellow dog and the mysterious thefts until the discovery yesterday morning of the animal's real nature.

About 10 o'clock yesterday morning the animal was seen to run across the yard and fall into a vat in the centre of the place. It quickly got out with a disabled leg and ran through the shed, causing a great commotion among the girls employed there. Policeman H. S. Prowse heard the screams of the girls and ran to the rescue, accompanied by every small boy in the neighborhood. The officer speedily subdued the animal, and it was then discovered that it was a coyote. A rope was placed around its neck and it was taken to a livery stable in the vicinity. Bertin gave up all claims to the animal, and one of the livery stable men declared that he would take it home and attempt to tame it.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Under Age.

People in Birchtown were used to Uncle Randolph Green's way of talking and enjoyed it, but at last there came, as a member of the summer colony, a man who had a desire to set everything and everybody straight, according to his ideas.

"What is the sense of your referring to that animal of yours as a 'colt?'" demanded this person one day. "How old is he?"

"Well, he's going on eleven years," said Uncle Randolph, mildly.

"Eleven years!" sneered the man. "Well, we should call that pretty ancient for a colt—in New York."

"I think likely you would," said Uncle Randolph, without rancor, but with considerable firmness in his soft, old voice; "but perhaps 'twould be well to consider, mister, that this colt o' mine resides in Birchtown, where eleven years is pretty young for a horse."—Youth's Companion.

His Pay Was Raised.

Genius that may grow to great things must have been born in the office boy of whom the St. Louis Post-Dispatch tells this story:

The "boss" was bending over a table looking at the directory. The new office boy slipped up quietly and put a note in his hand. The boss read:

"Honored sir. Your pants is ripped."

Early Literary Fame.

The strenuous life in literary circles seems to have antedated the present era. Bryant was only 19 when "Thanatopsis" won him undying fame. Shelley was 18 when he wrote "Queen Mab." Voltaire's first tragedy was published when he was but 22. Keats gave "Endymion" to the world at the age of 22; while David is said to have written the first Psalm at the age of 18, and history has it that Homer wrote his first odes at the tender age of 23 years.

A military company composed of the daughters of Boone County farmers has been organized, with headquarters at Englewood, eleven miles southeast of Columbia, Mo. The first public drill took place at a log-rolling at Englewood, where, in the presence of a crowd of curious visitors from all parts of the country, the girl soldiers gave a striking exhibition, going through the manual of arms like veterans.

OLD FASHIONED FARE

Hot Biscuits, Griddle Cakes, Pies and Puddings.

The food that made the fathers strong is sometimes unfit for the children under the new conditions that changing civilization is constantly bringing in. One of Mr. Bryan's neighbors in the great State of Nebraska writes:

"I was raised in the South, where hot biscuits, griddle cakes, pies and puddings are eaten at almost every meal, and by the time I located in Nebraska I found myself a sufferer from indigestion and its attendant illness, distress and pains after meals, and a constant headache, dull, heavy sensation by day and sleeplessness at night, loss of flesh, impaired memory, etc.

"I was rapidly becoming incapacitated for business when a valued friend suggested a change in my diet, the abandonment of heavy, rich stuff, and the use of Grape-Nuts food. I followed the good advice and shall always be thankful that I did so.

"Whatever may be the experience of others, the beneficial effects of the change were apparent in my case almost immediately. My stomach, which had rejected other food for so long, took to Grape-Nuts most kindly; in a week or two my headache was gone, I began to sleep healthfully and before a month was out the scales showed that my lost weight was coming back. My nervousness was restored with the renewed health that I felt in body and mind. For two years now Grape-Nuts food has kept me in prime condition, and I propose to shall for the rest of my days.

"And, by the way, my 2½ year old baby is as fond of Grape-Nuts as I am, always insists on having it. It has made her as healthy and hearty as they make them." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason.

ECZEMA FOR TWO YEARS

Little Girl's Awful Suffering With Terrible Skin Humor—Sleepless Nights for Mother—Speedy Cure by Cuticura.

"My little girl had been suffering for two years from eczema, and during that time I could not get a night's sleep; as the ailment was very severe. I had tried many remedies, deriving no benefits, I had given up all hope. But as a last resort I was persuaded to try Cuticura, and one box of the Ointment, and two bottles of the Resolvent, together with the Soap, effected a permanent cure. Mrs. I. B. Jones, Addington, Ind. T."

Early Literary Fame.

The strenuous life in literary circles seems to have antedated the present era. Bryant was only 19 when "Thanatopsis" won him undying fame. Shelley was 18 when he wrote "Queen Mab." Voltaire's first tragedy was published when he was but 22. Keats gave "Endymion" to the world at the age of 22, while David is said to have written the first Psalm at the age of 18, and history has it that Homer wrote his first odes at the tender age of 23 years.

A military company composed of the daughters of Boone County farmers has been organized, with headquarters at Englewood, eleven miles southeast of Columbia, Mo. The first public drill took place at a log-rolling at Englewood, where, in the presence of a crowd of curious visitors from all parts of the country, the girl soldiers gave a striking exhibition, going through the manual of arms like veterans.

OLD FASHIONED FARE.

Hot Biscuits, Griddle Cakes, Fine Puddings.

The food that made the fathers strong is sometimes unfit for the children under the new conditions that changing civilization is constantly bringing in. One of Mr. Bryan's neighbors in the great State of Nebraska writes:

"I was raised in the South, where hot biscuits, griddle cakes, pies and puddings are eaten at almost every meal, and by the time I located in Nebraska I found myself a sufferer from indigestion and its attendant illness and pains after meals, an almost constant headache, dull, heavy sickness by day and sleeplessness at night, loss of flesh, impaired memory, etc.

"I was rapidly becoming incapacitated for business when a valued friend suggested a change in my diet, the abandonment of heavy, rich stuff and the use of Grape-Nuts food. I followed the good advice and shall always be thankful that I did so.

"Whatever may be the experience of others, the beneficial effects of the change were apparent in my case almost immediately. My stomach, which had rejected other food for so long, took to Grape-Nuts most kindly; in a week or two my headache was gone, I began to sleep healthfully and before a month was out the scales showed that my lost weight was coming back. My nervousness was restored with the renewed vigor that I felt in body and mind. For two years now Grape-Nuts food has kept me in prime condition, and I propose to shall for the rest of my days.

"And, by the way, my 2½ year old baby is as fond of Grape-Nuts as I am, always insists on having it. It keeps her as healthy and hearty as they make them." Name given by Postum Cereal Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason.

"Hanna's Maggie," the woman who used to make the historic hash with which the senator was wont to regale his friends in Washington on Sunday mornings, is with Mrs. Hanna at the Hotel Gotham in New York, where the widow has established herself permanently. A private kitchen has been constructed for her private use and Maggie reigns there as chef. Many distinguished men have partaken of the toothsome dish which made her famous. Senator Hanna's will provided a snug little farm in Ohio for his cook, but she left that in other hands when Mrs. Hanna sent for her.

A TRULY IDEAL WIFE

HER HUSBAND'S BEST HELPER

Vigorous Health Is the Great Source of the Power to Inspire and Encourage —All Women Should Seek It.

One of the most noted, successful and richest men of this century, in a recent article, has said, "Whatever I am and whatever success I have attained in this world I owe all to my wife. From the day I first knew her she has been an inspiration, and the greatest helpmate of my life."

Mrs. Bessie Ainsley

To be such a successful wife, to retain the love and admiration of her husband, to inspire him to make the most of himself, should be a woman's constant study.

If a woman finds that her energies are flagging, that she gets easily tired, dark shadows appear under her eyes, she has backache, headaches, bearing-down pains, nervousness, whites, irregularities or the blues, she should start at once to build up her system by a tonic with specific powers, such as Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Following we publish by request a letter from a young wife:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:

"Ever since my child was born I have suffered, as I hope few women ever have, with inflammation, female weakness, bearing-down pains, backache and wretched headaches. It affected my stomach so I could not enjoy my meals, and half my time was spent in bed.

"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman, and I feel so grateful that I am glad to write and tell you of my marvelous recovery. It brought me health, new life and vitality."—Mrs. Bessie Ainsley, 611 South 10th Street, Tacoma, Wash.

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for Mrs. Ainsley it will do for every sick and ailing woman.

If you have symptoms you don't understand write to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free and always helpful.

Buying Up America.

Foreign landlordism is reaching out its tentacles in the direction of America. A syndicate headed by the earl of Verulem and the earl of Lankerville owns a vast tract of land in Wisconsin. Alexander Grant, of London, has 35,000 acres in Kansas. The English Land Company owns 50,000 acres in Arkansas. Mr. Elfenhauser, of Halifax, has 600,000 in West Virginia. A Scotch concern, Syndicate No. 1, bought 50,000 acres in Florida. The Holland Syndicate owns 5,000,000 acres of grazing lands in the west, and the German Syndicate 2,000,000. It is said that 20,000,000 acres of good American land are owned by foreign landlords (English and Scotch). That is an area larger than the state of South Carolina, and nearly as large as Maine.

The queen of Greece is devoted to the sea and she is never happier than when she is cruising about on her yacht with her husband, King George. She bears the distinction of being the only lady admiral in the world, having received this honor from the late czar of Russia, who was fondly attached to his beautiful cousin. The king shares with her the love of the sea and is himself a sailor, and at the time of his election to the Hellenic throne was serving as midshipman in the British navy.

President Eliot's Simple Life.

President Eliot, of Harvard, lives a life of the greatest possible simplicity. After seventy years of life, more than half passed as head of the university, he declares that one of the most desirable satisfactions of his life comes from having had nothing to do with the attainment of wealth. Erect, light of foot, and alert as a youth, he eats well, sleeps well, walks rapidly with his shoulders thrown back and is as eager to get new facts as when he entered Harvard as a student fifty-six years ago. "I am satisfied with the rewards of my life," he said simply.

Professor Goldwin Smith, the venerable Canadian publicist, believes that as an encouragement to matrimony two votes should be given to every married man. He is very fond of children, who is turn lavish their affection on him. The professor delights in listening to their old ways of expressing themselves. Not long ago while visiting at the house of a friend he took a little girl on his knee and asked about a fine wax doll with which he had seen her playing. "Oh, I don't have anything to do with dolly any more," said the child. "We have a truly meat baby now, and that keeps me busy."

The vestrymen of old Trinity church, on Broadway, opposite Wall street, New York, recently refused $3,000,000 for the site, which was wanted for a skyscraper office building. This is not the first time that a large sum has been offered for the property, but the vestrymen steadfastly turn their backs on all such prospects, mindful of the historical associations connected with the old place, and perhaps reflecting that the Trinity corporation, already enormously wealthy, does not need the money.

It is said of Albert Gallatin, of Sacramento, Cal., who has just died, that he conceived and first carried out the modern method of the long-distance transmission of electric energy for power and light by carrying electricity to his city, 22 miles, from water power at Folsom. It is claimed that when he carried this power to run the street car service of Sacramento he was the pioneer, and until he made a success of it the scheme was looked upon with incredulity.

JEWS MASSACRED IN RUSSIAN RIOTS

Streets of Odessa Blood Stained by the Butcheries of the Mob.

REPUBLIC NOW DEMANDED

Repetition of the Kishineff Horrors—Helpless Men, Women and Children Ruthlessly Cut Down—Houses Broken Into—Student Militia Finally Takes Stand For the People—Bombs Thrown From House Tops—Martial Law in the City of Warsaw, Poland.

Odessa.—All Kishineff's horrors were repeated a thousandfold in this blood drenched city. While the bureaucrats in St. Petersburg were flooding the country with promises of a general amnesty and early peaceable reform mobs of assassins masquerading under the name of Loyalists were murdering Jews by hundreds and turning Odessa's streets into shambles. These outrages made it plain to all thinking men that whatever relief Russia may wrest from the Emperor there will be no peace for his Jewish subjects. It was manifest not only that Nicholas himself had no intention of stopping the massacre in the Jewish quarter, but that the vaunted liberator of the Russians, Count Witte, did not include the Jews in his scheme of amelioration. Women and children died by thousands in this city's Ghetto for no other crime than creed. They were shot, stabbed and strangled alike by the civilian mob and the Czar's soldiers. Mobs marching behind portraits of Emperor Nicholas and bearing scores of ikons on high poured into the quarter and butchered the defenseless Jews with hardly a moment's cessation.

Officials and Police Blind.

"Only the overthrow of the imperial government, as well as of the Romanoff dynasty, can save the Jews," said a foreign correspondent who long has made a study of conditions here. He said it as he watched gallant bands of students rallying to check the bloodthirsty Loyalists, whose chanting of the national hymn was a signal of death to whole neighborhoods of victims. The remark was justified. The student militia and the semi-military organizations of other revolutionists alone stretched forth a protecting hand to the unfortunates of the Jewish quarter. Police, troops, civil authorities and civilians of the merchant class either showed indifference to the fate of the Loyalists' quarry or approval of the massacre. The police fraternized openly with the Loyalists, and General Kaulbars, while ostensibly striving to quiet the mob with an address from the balcony of the palace, really flattered them so flagrantly that they answered him with exultant cheers and resumed their march against the Jews.

Count Witte at 11.30 at night had made no response to an urgent appeal sent to him by the rector of the university, begging for the instant dismissal of Governor Reinhardt, which was the only means the statesman could adopt, the petitioner said, to prevent a catastrophe. The rector's request was indorsed by hundreds of wealthy Jewish merchants.

Five Thousand Slaughtered.

Five thousand Jews had been massacred in the twenty-four hours ending at 9 o'clock in the evening. A continuous procession of ambulances and dead wagons streamed out of the quarter throughout the day. Twenty-six of such vehicles passed the Church of St. Stephen in one hour, loaded with dead and dying Jews. Women and little ones outnumbered the men among the slain and wounded. Piled high on cartloads of bodies were stacks of loot, which the Cossacks and other soldiers were conveying to their barracks. In spite of the ceaseless work of the dead wagons, hundreds of bodies strewed the streets of the Jewish quarter at sundown. It was utterly unsafe for non-combatants to venture in the streets after 9 o'clock at night. Martial law was in force and all citizens were ordered to stay indoors after that hour. Volley firing was heard for two hours after, however, with thousands of scattering shots. Policemen disguised as Jewish merchants fired on the troops from roofs, with the result that dozens of dwellings were stormed and their tenants massacred.

Bomb Throwing Begun.

Bomb throwing was begun in the afternoon, and many casualties among the soldiers and police resulted. Rapid fire guns were placed on all the principal street corners, and the rattle of their shots outroared the crack of rifles and revolvers. All the Jews who held out at night were barricaded in their homes. Few of them had weapons for even a pretense at self-defense. The entire Jewish colony would have been wiped out before nightfall had it not been for the student militia. All the Loyalists took oath they would not stop the massacre while a single Jew breathed in Odessa.

Martial Law in Warsaw.

Warsaw.—Hundreds of patriots were massacred by soldiers emboldened by the proclamation of martial law. Abrogation of that measure was promised by the Governor General the next day. He placarded the city with warnings that all persons who helped to assemble crowds in the streets would be shot down without question, and, instead of carrying out his pledge, he increased the severity of his instructions to the soldiers.

A group of ten or a dozen men could stand on a corner for a few minutes without violent molestation. The next day three seen alongside one another in any street were in danger of Cossack fire. Nevertheless, throngs held whole blocks in spite of the gendarmes, and it was not until Cossack sotnias charged them that they dispersed. No organized violence was shown to the troops, almost all the bloodshed being committed by the soldiers, but in a few instances civilians defended themselves and five or six troopers were killed.

Republic is Demanded.

St. Petersburg.—The council of the workingmen's delegates at midnight issued a notice pointing out the necessity of arming workers for a decisive struggle for the convocation of a constituent assembly, based on universal suffrage, with a view to the formation of a democratic republic.

The council decided to suspend the political strike at noon, but on the condition that it be resumed if their demands were not granted. The council decided also that only those newspapers may appear whose editors will entirely ignore the censorship. Compositors have refused to work except under that condition, and newspapers not complying with it are to be confiscated, their presses destroyed and their workmen boycotted.

The railway men's union, however, has decided to continue the strike, mainly through a desire to prevent the transport of troops to Finland. The Union of Unions has resolved to demand complete amnesty for political prisoners, the immediate withdrawal of troops from St. Petersburg and their replacement by militia drawn from the people.

FOR DAY OF PRAISE.

Thanksgiving Proclamation Issued by the President.

Washington, D. C.—The President issued his proclamation, naming Thursday, November 30, for Thanksgiving. The proclamation follows:

By the President of the United States of America:

A Proclamation.

When, nearly three centuries ago, the first settlers came to the country which has now become this great Republic, they fronted not only hardship and privation, but terrible risk to their lives. In those grim years the custom grew of setting apart one day in each year for a special service of thanksgiving to the Almighty for preserving the people through the changing seasons.

The custom has now become national and hallowed by immemorial usage. We live in easier and more plentiful times than our forefathers, the men who with rugged strength faced the rugged days, and yet the dangers to national life are quite as great now as at any previous time in our history.

It is eminently fitting that once a year our people should set apart a day for praise and thanksgiving to the Giver of Good, and at the same time that they express their thankfulness for the abundant mercies received, should manfully acknowledge their shortcomings and pledge themselves solemnly and in good faith to strive to overcome them.

During the past year we have been blessed with bountiful crops. Our business prosperity has been great. No other people has ever stood on as high a level of material well-being as ours now stands. We are not threatened by foes from without. The foes from whom we should pray to be delivered are our own passions, appetites and follies; and against these there is always need that we should war.

Therefore, I now set apart Thursday, the 30th day of this November, as a day of thanksgiving for the past and of prayer for the future, and on that day I ask that throughout the land the people gather in their homes and places of worship and, in rendering thanks unto the Most High for the manifold blessings of the past year, consecrate themselves to a life of cleanliness, honor and wisdom, so that this nation may do its allotted work on the earth in a manner worthy of those who founded it and of those who preserved it.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this second day of November in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and five, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirtieth.

(Seal) THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

WASHINGTON.

Having occasion to secure twenty-five additional officers for the Philippine constabulary, the places paying $1100 per annum to begin with, Captain McIntyre, Acting Chief of the Insular Bureau, invited 100 State military institutes and agricultural colleges to name candidates for the places among their graduates. Less than twenty applications were received, the faculties of the colleges attributing the lack of interest to the fact that their graduates were in great demand in the business world.

MORE FRAUD

Says Secretary Cheatham. Predicts more Disclosures. Report Criticized.

THE SECRETARY CRIES SHAME

On You, Mr. Wilson—Conditions on November 1 the Same as on October 1.

New York.—Richard Cheatham, of Atlanta, secretary of the Southern Cotton Association, is quoted by the Herald as having severely criticised the report of the cotton crop issued Friday from Washington, in which the condition of the crop on Nov. 1 was stated to be 68.8.

Mr. Cheatham, who is stopping in this city, said among other things:

"The most absurd piece of spit work ever attempted was the issuing of the crop report of Friday by Mr. Wilson, the secretary of agriculture. In this report he announced the 'condition' as 68.8. Now there is no sane man who ever saw a cotton stalk who does not know that on November and November 10, it is not only far beyond the fruiting or bearing stage but in nearly every case is entirely void of foliage of every kind.

"It has passed far beyond the blossoming stage. Its condition, so far as conditions are recognized in reports, is the same as on October previously. For Secretary Wilson to make a report on 'condition' of November 1 is to assist in the operations of the bear speculators to hammer down the price of cotton.

"I may say to Mr. Wilson, 'shame, shame, shame on him,' and the men who assisted him in this attempt to spite work against the cotton producers of the south. It is a final effort to 'get even,' and the attempt will result in sure discomfiture for the department of agriculture before the session of the next congress is far advanced. That there will be an investigation of this department by congress and the uncovering of matters now concealed by which all previous disclosures will pale into insignificance, I do not for an instant doubt."

The Southern Cotton Association in its bulletin of the crop, issued on October 31, estimated the crop for 1905 at 9,444,214 bales, a smaller production than Friday's estimate of 68.8 would promise.

The convention will take a stand for an eight-hour work day, uniform rates for classes of employment not ranging as miners and specific terms of employment, but this will be held subject to a joint discussion and will not be obtruded in advance of the request for a conference.

Methodist Conference.

Birmingham, Ala.—The Methodists of this city are looking forward with considerable interest to the thirty-sixth annual session of the North Alabama conference, which will be in session at Athens on November 22-27. Bishop Charles B. Galloway will preside, and many important questions will be considered. The conference will consist of 225 Methodist ministers and forty delegates, comprising four laymen from each of the ten districts. The chief matters before the conference will be a review of the work of the year ending, the announcement of appointments for the next year by the bishop and the discussion of missions and financial condition of the conference colleges and other property.

Louis Sees West Point.

New York.—Prince Louis of Battenberg, accompanied by officers of his squadron and of Rear Admiral Evans' fleet, visited the military academy at West Point Saturday. The Britishers saw the academy at its best. The beautiful spot was never more beautiful, the cadet troops never drilled better and the prince was especially interested in the hotly contested football game between the cadets and Carlisle Indians.

Horrible Crime.

Montgomery, Ala.—The crime for which Bob and John Andrews are on trial at Camden is one of the most revolting and terrible ever known in the chronicles of Alabama or in any other southern state for that matter. They are charged with the killing of their old father, James Andrews, and his young wife at Schuester, a small station in the country, and it seems that it was premeditated to some degree at any rate. Two little children are witnesses, having, it is alleged, seen the whole thing.

Was Not Fooling.

St. Louis, Mo.—Recent events have proved conclusively that the governor of the state was not emptily boasting when he said that if the New York Life Insurance Company did not refund the money illegally taken from the policyholders he would revoke their license in the state of Missouri. The company did not do so, and consequently the governor authorized the superintendent of the insurance department of the state to formally revoke their license.

The governor said that the revocation of the license would not affect the policyholders, as the state would see that they received their full interest.

Nearly Cut His Head Off.

Huntsville, Ala.—Curry Fackler, a negro bartender, had his head almost severed from his body Saturday night by a razor in the hands of Mary Davis. The woman was jealous of Fackler, and went with her razor to her lover's place of business, where she employed her weapon with deadly effect. Fackler's wound is pronounced fatal.

Big Fire in Richmond.

Richmond Va.—The three-story office and warehouse building of the Virginia Packing Company, near this city, was totally destroyed by fire. Loss, $250,000; insurance, $156,000. The flames started in the slaughtering department of the plant, presumably from spontaneous combustion. W. H. Forbes is president of the company.

Dan Patch Lowers Record.

Memphis, Tenn.—Dan Patch, the pacing champion, in an exhibition mile on the track of the Memphis Trotting Association lowered the world's pacing record without a wind shield by one and one-quarter seconds, covering the mile in 1:58 flat. The former record of 1:59 1-4 was held by Star Pointer, made several years ago at the Readville track.

Fire Companies Did Heroic Work.

Brewton, Ala.—By the heroic and splendid work of the two volunteer fire companies of Brewton the disastrous blaze, which seriously damaged the main building, a two-story structure, and practically destroyed the stock of goods of the Luttrell Hardware Company Thursday night, the fire was confined to the one building. The stock of millinery of Mrs. P. B. McLellan, next door, was water damaged.

Rural Delivery.

Anniston, Ala.—J. A. Knight, special agent of rural free delivery service of the United States postoffice department, is in this city and will at once begin work looking to the establishment of a full county service for Calhoun. The expression, full county service, means an extension of the rural free delivery facilities to every nook and corner in Calhoun county approachable by public road.

AFRAID TO RETURN

Czar Nicholas Refuses to Live in St. Petersburg

CAN'T TRUST THE PEOPLE.

Frightened by the Fate of Louis XVI, Emperor Nicholas Will Winter at Sarkoe Seloe.

St. Petersburg.—Emperor Nicholas and the Russian court will not come to St. Petersburg this winter. A short time ago it was announced that the emperor was about to return to the winter palace, in an annex of which Count Witte has installed himself, but his majesty has now decided to go from Peterhop back to Sarkoe Seloe, where he has been living for almost two yers with the exception of the last two months spent at Peterhof. Except on the occasion of the ceremony of blessing the waters last January, when the emperor narrowly escaped death, owing to a mysterious charge of grape being fired in the direction of the imperial party by a saluting battery, the emperor has not stepped inside the winter palace for over eighteen months.

Unfortunate Decision.

His decision not to come to the capital is regarded as unfortunate, not only for its moral effect, but because it keeps him surrounded by court influences and out of close, immediate touch with Count Witte, who at the present time should have daily, almost hourly conferences with the emperor. Members of his majesty's entourage have strongly advised against the emperor being in St. Petersburg when the national assembly meets, as well as on account of the danger of popular disorders at the capital this winter, recalling to the emperor's mind, not without effect, the fatal results of Louis XVI agreeing to leave Versailles and place himself at the mercy of the populace of Paris in 1789.

John Mitchell in the Chair.

Pittsburg, Pa.—The second day's session of the American Federation of Labor convention was called to order promptly at 9 o'clock Tuesday by President Gompers. He called John Mitchell, second vice-president, to the chair, and James Duncan, the first vice-president, read the annual report of the executive council. It gave in detail many of the points covered in the reports of the president, secretary and treasurer. Two meetings of the council were held during the year, the last occurring in this city on Saturday night. At these meetings many jurisdictional disputes were brought up and recommendations made, most of which have been complied with.

Seven Men Out for Sheriff.

Florence, Ala.—With seven candidates already in the field, the race for sheriff of Lauderdale county promises to be a lively one. The primary election will be held early in the spring at a date to be fixed by the state executive committee, and as the present incumbent, Sheriff O. B. Hill, cannot succeed himself, a fair field is left to the numerous aspirants. Joe K. Hines, of Hines, has served a term as sheriff S. W. Lipscomb was chief of police of the city of Florence under Mayor John B. Weakley, Judge Dowdy and Cal Young are deputies under Sheriff Hill, and Thomas Tuten is constable at Rogersville. The other candidates are R. F. Cooper, of Rogersville, and Daniel Eastep, of East Florence.

Onyx Near Anniston.

Anniston, Ala.—It is said that in sinking a deep well near Anniston recently a strata or vein of black onyx was gone through. Samples were sent both to New York and Baltimore and pronounced to be very fine by experts, worth $5 per cubic foot. Large moneyed interests are rumored to be investigating the property quietly, and if as represented a company will be formed to mine and polish it, to be located either in Anniston or another town in Calhoun county. The vein is said to be several yards in thickness and of a variety tha ncannot be excelled.

Heavy Damages.

Knoxville, Tenn.—The first damage suit resulting from the Fraterville mine explosion of nearly three years ago to reach the supreme court was decided Saturday when the court sustained a verdict of $5,000 damages in favor of Nancy J. Green, of Grainger county, against the East Tennessee Coal Company. One hundred and eighty miners and boys lost their lives in this explosion, and of the host of suits which resulted scores were compromised for less than $900 each.

FIFTEEN CENTS SAYS JORDAN.

Cotton is Worth That Much According to Government and Other Figures.

Atlanta, Ga.—President Harvie Jordan, of the Southern Cotton Association, in an interview says:

"The open declaration of Secretary Wilson of the department of agriculture, that the recent condition report of 68.8 is 'accurate and trustworthy' and 'which shows that the year's crop will be in the neighborhood of only 10,000,000 bales' should knock out all the high estimates and put everybody down on the working basis of a short crop. Secretary Wilson's estimate confirms the report made by this association some time ago, predicting a crop of about 10,000,000 bales.

"As this report is confirmed by accurate information by two of the most reliable sources, it is unquestionable that the remainder of the crop now in the hands of the planters should not be marketed for less than 15 cents a pound. I shall at once issue a proclamation advising this course."

News of Centre.

Centre, Ala.—The court of county commissioners was in session last week and transacted a large amount of routine business.

Elections were ordered to be held in a number of precincts in the county on the question of establishing stock law district. A petition for an election on the local school tax question was presented to the court, but the matter was deferred until the general election in 1906.

Edgar P. Hately was elected keeper of the alms house to succeed J. L. Tucker.

Resolutions asking for the appointment of an additional federal judge for the Northern district of Alabama were adopted by the Centre bar recently.

Cotton Mill Sold.

Huntsville, Ala.—The Madison Manufacturing Company's cotton mill, franchises, houses and all other properties were sold to Capt. Milton Humes for $57,500.

Y. M. C. A. TO RUN HOTEL.

Babahatchie Inn, Oakdale, Tenn., on Queen and Crescent Route.

The railroad men of the Queen and Crescent Route will be glad to hear that a Railroad Department of the Young Men's Christian Association will on November 1st assume the management of the Babahatchie Inn at Oakdale, Tenn. A secretary has already been employed and as soon as some necessary changes can be made in the building he will have charge of affairs. The hotel will be run by the association and arrangements will be made to accommodate all the railroad men as well as the traveling public. The building will be thoroughly renovated, many new attractions will be added and the railroad men will have a home of which they will have reason to feel proud. Whether it be considered an expression of the generally pervading altruistic spirit, a manifestation of the American eagerness for self help or an evidence of the vitality of the religious forces of our times, the railroad branch of the Y. M. C. A. is worthy of our attention and study. Although it has been but 33 years since the first railroad association was organized in the United States, there are now 207 local associations, departments and branches with a membership of nearly 75,000.

During the past year ten railroad associations have been organized in buildings valued at $180,800. The railroad employes and individual friends of the movement have given freely and more than 80 per cent of the railroad companies have spent money to help build these magnificent buildings along the railroads throughout the country. Such buildings are always erected in cities or small towns where the men must lay over so it affords them an inviting and attractive home where they can get a bath, a meal of substantial food at a reasonable price, a nice clean bed in which to sleep and plenty of games, books, magazines and music to attract and entertain them after they have had their rest. Social, religious and physical work is constantly being done. While on the road many times the men must stop in places where accommodations can not be found. The Young Men's Christian Association is being organized in many such places and is becoming very popular with the men.

The Twelfth International Conference of Railroad Department of Young Men's Christian Association was held in Detroit, Mich., Sept. 28-Oct. 1st, 1905. In this great gathering of more than a thousand railroad men from Mexico, Canada and the United States of America it was clear to be seen that the Y. M. C. A. has been a great blessing to railroad men. The Y. M. C. A. has for its object the making of men.

SITUATION SERIOUS.

The President May Send Special Commission to the Orient.

IMPORTANT TO THE SOUTH.

Especially Is This the Case With the Cotton Crop of the Southern States.

Washington, D. C.—President Roosevelt is considering the advisability of sending a commission to China to ascertain exactly what the commercial status of the United States is in that county. Several reports have been received on this subject lately, but they have been so conflicting as to becloud rather than to clarify the situation.

Perhaps the most important of these was the report made nearly three weeks ago by O. P. Austin, chief of the bureau of statistics of the department of commerce and labor, to Secretary Metcalf. Mr. Austin went to China more than six months ago for the single purpose of learning the condition and prospects of American commerce there, and especially to consider what effect the boycott was likely to have. His report has been made, but what it is cannot be learned, nor can any information be got as to when it is likely to be given to the public.

This circumstance, together with the fact that Mr. Austin will not even intimate what the nature of it is, has given rise to the belief that his report has revealed rather a more serious situation than one would infer from the statements that have been made public. The recent murder of five American missionaries, while not attributed directly to the boycott, is believed to have been due to the general spirit of animosity which is felt by the people of that country for those of the United States, a spite which manifests itself in murder when there is any kind of provocation, and which is apt to make itself more steadily felt in a commercial way unless something should be done to remove the grievance which the Chinese imagine they have.

The duty of preserving American opportunity in China is regarded as of the utmost importance, especially at this time, when it seems as if the competition of the nations in that empire is to be more spirited than ever before. The south feels perhaps a more lovely interest in this matter than any other section, for the reason that it looks to China for a market for its increasing crops of cotton.

Verdict of Not Guilty.

Cordova, Ala.—In the court of Judge Thomas Sowell here John Davidson, city marshal of Cordova, and Dr. and Mrs. Morton has been discharged upon the count of abduction on which they were arrested several days ago. This action terminates for the present a case which has attracted no little interest in Walker county.

Some days since Viola Hood, the 14-year-old daughter of ohn W. Hood, one of the largest property owners and capitalists in the county, mysteriously disappeared from home. Investigation showed that she had gone to Columbus, Miss., and it was subsequently charged that she had stopped there with a relative of Dr. Morton's. It was also alleged that she had been put on the train on which she left here by Marshal Davidson. The hearing of the case consumed four days, and the evidence at times bordered on the sensational.

Conscience Hurt Him.

Birmingham, Ala.—The good work of conscience is the cause of the arrest of Joe Ewing, a white man, who is now in the city jail. While Officer Smoot was patroling his beat recently he was approached by a white man, who told him that he had committed an offense in Nashville, Tenn., and that he was fully repentant and wanted to be returned to receive his just punishment. He told the officer that he had stolen some money. Smoot was a little afraid of the confession of the man, thinking he wanted a free ride to Nashville, but took him down to the city prison and docketed the charge of suspicious character against him. The man gave the name of Joe Ewing, and he told the officers the names of the parties to communicate with in Nashville to verify the truthfulness of his statement.

Pensacola, Fla.—Yellow fever is practically at an end in Pensacola. Friday's report shows no new cases and no deaths, while there are only two cases under treatment.

THE PULPIT.

AN ELOQUENT SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. C. L. PALMER.

Subject: Ancient Worship.

Kingston, N. Y.—The following erudite and eloquent sermon on "Ancient Worship" was preached Sunday in the Reformed Church of the Comforter by the pastor, the Rev. C. L. Palmer. Dr. Palmer said:

History discloses that the worship of the New Testament is not the creation of the later dispensation, but is the result of a long and complex process of evolution. All we know respecting the time of its inception is that it is as old as the human family, which confirms the belief that religion and life are inseparable.

Three principal elements constitute religion, worship, doctrine and life. Worship is the attitude of the individual or nation toward its deity. Doctrine is the abstract formation of truth into definitions and conception. Life is the conduct that is presupposed to conform to one's belief. Which shall be more prominent is determined by the spirit of the age.

Since religion is both natural and supernatural we must look beyond the former for the channels of revelation. All creation is one harmonious doxology to the Creator, but His works do not give us all the information required for the true worship of God. Accordingly God has appointed certain ones to communicate His will. The prophets were a class chosen to instruct the people in the character and requirements of God. Their teachings are called the "word" of God. Sages uttered proverbs, riddles and dialogues while priests gave instruction in the form of law, which recognized no distinction between civic and religious life.

Notwithstanding forms and habits have undergone many radical changes, there are certain features of worship that remain essentially the same. There has always been a certain place dedicated to the service of God. With us it is the church, but in the early times it was the temple, synagogue, tabernacle, altar or grove.

A certain number of men are dedicated to the work of the Christian ministry, but in the earlier days there were priests and prophets who labored for the elevation of mankind. At a still earlier time the father of a family or head one of a tribe or clan conducted the worship.

Sacrificial offerings have been discontinued among Christians, because the Lord Jesus Christ has been sacrificed once for all. It was not so in the distant past. It was then believed that the fellowship between God and His people was fostered by sacrifice. The occasion was not unlike a social meal in which the god of the clan or family partook of the repast with its members. While the original idea of communion with the deity was paramount, sacrifice did not assume its full religious significance until perfected in the temple ritual. Other acts of worship, such as prayer and the vow, have ever occupied an important place, as well as music, and at times dreams, sorcery and dancing.

Worship presupposes a time for the service of God. In the remote past when the people lived a wandering life, it was not possible to have a particular time and place, but when they settled down to agricultural life three feasts were instituted, one in the spring, another in the early summer and the third in the autumn, corresponding to our modern Easter, pentecost and thanksgiving.

Worship without hymns and songs is inconceivable. If we were deprived of some of our favorite hymns it would destroy one of the most potent motives of worship. The psalms were just as precious to the ancients as the modern hymns are to us, and exerted the same influence.

The most reliable scholars are of the conviction that the legal code of the Old Testament was not the result of a single authorship, but the work of a redactor who compiled existing traditions and documents. This is more in harmony with the method God employs to accomplish His purpose, and is certainly explanatory of the way that our Bible took form.

It should be borne in mind that it is not my purpose to present the ideal worship of the New Testament, but to study the course of religious development that culminated in the service of the Christian church. In so doing we shall encounter many things that are very much below the Christian standard, but we may not on that account ignore them, since they are necessary to illustrate the progress in which we have now occasion to rejoice.

The evolution of worship is too vast a theme to cover in one discourse, we shall therefore confine our attention to its earliest phases.

I. The ancient Semitic worship. This antedates the religion of Israel, and contains practices that would not be endured by the church of Christ, though we must not forget that the now unchristian land of Arabia was the mother of religion. The Semitic family has given the world the two earliest known forms of civilization—Egyptian and Babylonian and the three highest faiths, Judiasm, Christianity and Mohammedanism.

In the earliest period belief and life constituted a very insignificant part of worship. Then the emphasis was upon the forms. The amount of one's religion was estimated by his devotion to ceremony. It was not until a very much later time that doctrine and practice were given the attention they deserve.

At this time there were no states or nations. The people were joined together in families, tribes or clans. They had no abiding place, but journeyed from place to place to furnish their cattle with pasturage. The god of the tribe was supposed to be an ancestor, who determined their prosperity or adversity.

Each tribe had its god, who could be worshiped only by the members of the clan. If one united with another tribe he was obliged to do homage to the deity of it. Nor could the deity of one clan bless outside of its own territory.

According to the most primitive conception but little importance was attached to the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. Future life has ever been a tenet of every religious system, but it was emphasized less than the present life, since it was held that no service could be rendered the deity beyond the grave. This explains the reason for exhuming the dead.

Sacrifice occupied a most important place among the Semites. And there are traces of human sacrifices which under the Christian dispensation have been offered only by heathen. The Semites living in tribes or clans had a local deity to whom they offered sacrifice. He sat at the table and partook of the slain animal.

II. The primitive Hebrew stage. This period covers the patriarchal and nomadic epoch, while the people were still wandering about. It is not surprising to discover many points of resemblance between this period and the preceding. They were just emerging from the ancient darkness into the later day. God had assigned them leaders whose work it was to lead them into the truth, but they were slow to follow.

Being nomads they appointed worship wherever they were. There was no temple, tabernacle or ark. A rude altar erected out of the stones of the ground was their temple. In Jacob's family were found teraphim or household gods.

Sacrifice still retained the social aspect so that it meant little more than a family gathering at which the local deity was present. However, by this time Jehovah was recognized as the God of the Hebrews. Other acts of worship, such as prayer, vows and dreams were observed.

There were very few if any hymns at this time. The law had not been fully compiled, and a limited literature.

III. This division introduces us to the Canaanitish state. Great changes took place during this epoch, because the people of Israel discontinued their nomadic life and settled down in the promised land among tribes of foreign faith. We naturally find that the chosen people suffered no little contamination, of which subsequent history is evidence.

Sacred places increased in numbers and the worship of Baal flourished. It seems to be a time of degeneration, for the worship of Jehovah was corrupted. The ark containing the two tables of stone was transported from one place to another. Images were erected to represent the deity, and the Urim and Thummim were employed to ascertain the will of God.

Sacrifice was regarded as communion with the deity. The burnt offering seems to have been used more than any other. Prayer, vows, visions were still observed, while sorcery was losing its hold.

Having discontinued their wandering life they observed the Sabbath, the feasts of the moon and of harvest. It appears, however, that they were not free from corruption.

Music and dancing had its place, and it is said of David as a later time that he danced. There were hymns, such as the exodus song, the song of Deborah and the song of Hannah. Laws were assuming form as the outgrowth of custom. They were not written by Moses, but compiled or formulated by him.

IV. The prophetic stage. This period is so called because of the number of prophets who exercised a most wholesome influence on the life of the people. This was done by teaching a more enlightened conception of God. Samuel, David, Elijah, Elisha, Isaiah and Jonah were among those who raised the standard of living.

The high places were still used for the worship of Baal, and at one time the worship of Baal and Jehovah were consolidated. At the time of David the ark of the covenant was taken to Jerusalem, and the temple was completed in the days of Solomon, which produced a more orderly system of worship. Idolatrous practices were not, however, entirely superseded, for we read of golden calves at Bethel and Gilgal.

The completion of the temple made the most perfect organization and development of the priesthood imperative. To this time no distinction was known between church and state, but the division of the monarchy in 975 produced a complete separation.

The acts of worship continued about the same as in the preceding period, except that certain restrictions were imposed. Sacrifice was offered to establish communion with God. There was some human sacrifice. Praying to God was becoming a pleasure, and vows were made by Nazarites. Oracles and dreams were regarded as channels through which Jehovah communicated His revelations. Sorcery was practiced against the protests of the prophets. A hymn book was in process of compilation and the priests were compiling law.

The attitude of the prophets toward existing conditions will help us to appreciate our theme and make its application.

The prophets considered the high places as detrimental to the religious life of the nation. They maintained that the temple was all they required for the worship of the true God.

The prophets insisted upon purity of life among the people of God, especially the priests. It appears from the records that the sacred office was not entirely free from corruption.

They further insisted upon the true worship of the heart. While admitting the place of forms, they contended that the forms must be spiritualized.

The Reward of Earnestness.

Christ met multitudes of men in Jericho one day. But so far as we know He picked out only two for special blessing. The reason was that these two were the most in earnest. Bartimeus would be heard, though others tried to hush his voice; Zaccheus would see, though the crowd overtopped him. So these two won the rewards of earnestness. A vague desire will never bring us close to Christ; we must be in earnest.—Presbyterian.

How George Fox Learned Patience.

I found something within me that would not be sweet and patient and kind. I did what I could to keep it down, but it was there. I besought Jesus to do something for me, and when I gave Him my will He came into my heart, and took out all that would not be patient, and then He shut the door.—George Fox.

Path to Victory.

God's trials, nobly borne, in obedience to His righteous will, are the paths to victorious triumph. — S. A. Brooke.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR NOVEMBER 19.

Subject: Nehemiah's Prayer, Neh. i., 1-11—Golden Text, James v., 16—Memory Verses, 8, 9—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

1. Nehemiah hears of the distress in Jerusalem (vs. 1-3). 1. "The words of Nehemiah." Rather the narrative on record. "Son of Hachaliah." Probably the tribe of Judah and of the royal family of David. He was cupbearer to King Artaxerxes at Shushan, the capital. This title implied that Nehemiah was a councilor, statesman, courtier and favorite. For twelve years he was Governor of Judea, leading a great religious revival and rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem. At the end of twelve years he went back to Persia, but after a time he again returned to Jerusalem and effected some reforms there. "Month Chisleu." Ninth month, corresponding to the end of November and the beginning of December. The Hebrew months varied according to the moon. "Twentieth year." Of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, who reigned from B. C. 465 to 423. It was under this king that Ezra was granted letters to go to Jerusalem. 2. "Hanani." His own brother, to whom he afterward gave the charge of the gates of Jerusalem (chapter 7:2). "Came," From Jerusalem to Shushan. "I asked them." Respecting Jerusalem and its people. "That had escaped." From captivity. "Which were left." The word "left" points more specifically to such as survived the persecutions to which the community at Jerusalem had been exposed.

3. "In the province." Of Judea, now a province of the Persian empire. "Great affliction and reproach." Their subjection to Persia forced itself on the Jews at every turn. The tribute imposed on them was a heavy burden to a poor people. Jewish recruits had doubtless been forced into the Persian armies. The country was pillaged in open day, and many Jews were carried into slavery by nightly surprises, while the corpses of murdered men were often found on the road. "Wall—down." The wall and houses had been destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar more than 140 years before (2 Kings 25:10), and their rubbish still lay in sight. They were partially rebuilt at one time (Ezra 4:12). The neighboring races, infuriated at the rejection of their friendly offers of assistance by Zerubbabel, years before, and still more so by Ezra's recent act in sending back to their homes all the wives of non-Jewish races found in Jerusalem and Judea, had attacked Jerusalem, and after fierce struggles had broken down the newly built walls and burned the gates.

II. Nehemiah prays for help (vs. 4-11). 4. "Wept." Perhaps now for the first time a deep, keen sense of his people's woes came over his soul. "Mourned." Over the condition of his people, the desolation of the holy city, the reproach upon the name of God, and the sins which had brought them to this low estate, which had not yet been put away. "Certain days." From Chisleu to Nisan, four months, until the king noticed his grief. "Fasted." A token of the genuineness of his sorrow. "Prayed." In earnest, protracted prayer that God would favor the purpose which he seems to have secretly formed of asking the royal permission to go to Jerusalem.

5. "Beseech Thee." The prayer of Nehemiah deserves critical study as a model of blended adoration, invocation, confession, supplication and confident appeal. "Covenant and mercy." Covenant refers to God's definite promises. Mercy refers to His loving character, which gives more than is pledged. 6. "Ear—attentive—ears open." Let Thine ear hear our confession and mercifully pardon. Let Thine eye behold our suffering and send speedy succor. "Day and night." His grief was doubtless increased at the thought that all this evil existed in spite of Ezra's work. He withdrew from his court duties and spent a time in retirement in most sincere sorrow. "I and my father's house." Nehemiah had a clear sense of his identification with his people in sin as in misery. 7. "Dealt very corruptly." Some of these sins are mentioned in Neh. 5:1-7, 10, 11; 13:15; Ezra 9:1; 2 Chron. 36:14-17. "Commandments." The moral precepts by which our lives should be regulated. "Statutes." What refers to the rites and ceremonies of thy religion. "Judgments." The precepts of justice relative to our conduct to each other.

8. "If ye transgress." This is not a quotation, but a reference to the general sense of various passages, such as Lev. 26:27-30; Deut. 28:45-52, etc. The fact that God had fulfilled His word of threatening was a proof that He would fulfill His word of promise. 9. "Turn unto Me." When we turn to sin God turns to discipline; when we turn to righteousness, He turns to mercy. "Gather them." God had a place devoted to His people; this promise had already been partially fulfilled.

10. "Thy servants." Who will devote themselves to do Thy will. "And Thy people." With whom Thou hast made covenant. They are the descendants of those whom Thou hast delivered from Egypt. 11. "Who desire." True desires are: 1. Constant, not flashes. 2. Hearty, strong and growing. 3. Include the favor of God and spiritual grace. 4. Regard the means of salvation. "Prosper—Thy servant." He had in mind to ask of King Artaxerxes that he might go to Jerusalem and help his people. He asked definitely for exactly what he wanted. "Grant him mercy." Nehemiah prayed that he might have favor in the sight of the king. "King's cupbearer." An important officer, having charge of the wines of the royal household, standing by the king's side at meals, and sipping from the cup to prove that it was not poisoned.

Thirteen Killed and Thirty Injured.

Kansas City, Mo.—Thirteen persons were killed and thirty injured in the wreck of the Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe passenger train No. 1, known as the California express, which while running at thirty-five miles an hour struck a loose rail, ditching five cars one mile east of Blue river, which is the eastern limits of this city.

SCIENTIFIC & INDUSTRIAL

The new turbine steamer Virginian has the distinction of having made the transatlantic trip from land to land in 100 hours, breaking the Canadian record by nearly twenty hours.

The fighting in the Far East has shown the hand grenade to be a most formidable and destructive weapon, and it is possible that we may yet see a revival of the grenadier companies that gained such renown by their great prowess in bygone times.

Gas producers, gas engines and centrifugal pumps will be used at two of the pumping stations of the New Orleans drainage works to handle the dry-weather flow. The storm water will be pumped by the electrical apparatus already installed, which will be worked intermittently as occasion requires.

The birth rate in England has been declining steadily for years, and has now reached the lowest figures on record, viz., 27.0 per 1000 in London and 29.2 per 1000 for seventy-five large towns. Were it not for a diminishing death rate, particularly among infants, the population would already be on the decrease.

The German periodicals describe a new plant which produces a gum smilar to caoutchouc. It is a variety of Landolphia thollonii. It attains a height of 40 to 50 centimeters, and has numerous roots, from which a juice is extracted containing as much as 18 per cent. of the gum. It grows in sandy places and will bear drought.

Cheerfulness During Illness.

There is a great restorative force in cheerfulness. It is a sovereign remedy. The physician who can inspire expectancy of something better to come, who can give you confidence in your power to overcome disease, and can make you feel that it is a shame for a man made to do a great work in the world to be ailing, has very little use for drugs.

Sick people do not realize how much their faith and confidence in the physician have to do with their cure. If he is cheerful, happy, hopeful they feel buoyed up, sustained by his very presence. They feel the thrill of his splendid vitality, and gather strength from his courage. They catch the contagion of his cheerfulness and reflect his moods and condition.

Invalids who have dragged along in misery for years have been suddenly, as if by magic, lifted out of their bondage by the cheer and encouragement which have come from some unexpected good fortune. This shows us how dependent the body is upon the mind, how it sympathizes with it and takes on its colorings, which are represented in the different functions. —O. S. Marden, in Success Magazine.

Rebuking Bad Manners.

The usual hurried crowd was filing through the turnstile to the Union Depot from the elevated station this morning, reports the Kansas City Star. A man stood aside to permit two women to precede him through the whirligig. As he started through, an impetuous man with a grip bumped him aside and took his place. The man's politeness made a lightning change to indignation. A swift kick was the only redress possible, and it sent the hasty one through the turnstile with some impetus to spare.

The offended man with the grip turned to seek satisfaction, but he was barred in. It would cost him five cents to get at the enemy. He reached for a nickel, looked at the clock and hurried on to his train.

"That was good for him. I admire your spirit," said a woman.

"I'm no hero," modestly exclaimed the other. "I only did my duty as I saw it. Any one else would have done the same. Besides, didn't I have a cinch, though? He couldn't touch me."

Pompadours Are Falling Down.

It is pleasant to note, say many, that women are taking a tuck in their pompadours and are wearing smoothly banded tresses. The fluffy, floppy coiffure, that for the last few seasons has pointed skyward, has toppled down at last and its place is taken by the low roll or part, the rest of the hair being plainly and neatly arranged. The reason for this, the milliners assert, is that tiny tip-tilted hats, which have at last "arrived," after repeated unheeded efforts to gain ascendancy, and large pompadours simply won't "go" together. As the hat is ultra-fashionable, of course, the women will do themselves over to suit it.—New York Press.

$250 For a Rabbit-Trap.

The English Society for the Suppression of Steel Traps, President Lord Tollemache, offers a prize of £50 for the best model of a humane rabbit-trap. Whether it catches the animal without injury or whether it kills instantly is left to the inventor's discretion.

To be successful a model must be capable of being sold retail at as reasonable a price as existing cheap steel traps.

Place For Her Clothes.

In the Southwest it is customary for a young man who secretly admires a young woman to say to his intimates, "She's just my style; she can put her clothes in my chest." When the girl hears of this remark she at once understands that the youth is inclined to matrimony, and it is "up to her" to encourage him or give him his congee.—New York Press.

Proof That They Know the Days of the Week.

Along the wharves in New York the cat is not a pet, but a business investment, an insurance policy against the river rats. Yet, wild as some of these animals are, there is a man whom they regard with approval. That is the cats' meat man.

"I don't know all of them," he says. No man could; and besides there are changes all the time. But if I don't know them, they all know me, every one of them. And they're wise; cats are as wise as any beast that lives. Every cat on the block runs to meet me, but they are always on their good behavior. Now, here's a place where I leave meat for six cats. They follow me when I give it to the porter. They are the cats that belong here, and all the rest of the cats are waiting peaceably for me to come out. Now, see those four cats run ahead and into the next place; they're the cats that belong there, and they line up to meet me.

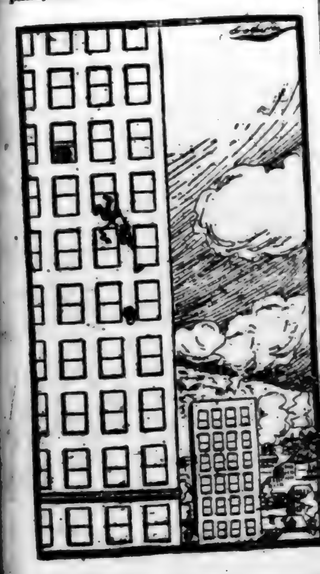
"But that is a small part of the wisdom of these cats. Five mornings in the week I get around my beat between 7 and 8 o'clock, but on Saturdays I am always late, and never reach the block before 9. Well, on Saturday morning the cats know that I'm late and they don't put their heads outside the doors until it lacks only a little of 9. You see there are calendars hanging up in every office to tell the day of the week, and clocks, too, and there's nothing to hinder the cats from consulting them. If they don't find out that way, how do they know when it's 9 o'clock Saturday morning?"—Golden Days.

HUNG 200 FEET FROM EARTH.

Moments of Agonized Suspense for Pittsburg Window Cleaner.

Hiram Johnson, a colored window-cleaner at the Frick building, hung suspended by a single strap 200 feet above the street for half an hour recently, says a Pittsburg dispatch. He was cleaning a window from the outside of the twelfth story. He had the regulation harness strapped about him to keep him from falling. He was leaning backward, cleaning the upper pane, and bearing considerable weight upon the strap. One of the hooks which fastened the strap to the building gave way, and in a moment the man was dangling in midair.

As his entire weight was held by the strap and the one remaining hook in the side of the building he realized that this uncertain support might give way at any moment. The man yelled lustily for help, for he had swung clear of the window and could not reach the sill again. His cries were heard by the men in the office as well as by the people on the street below. The men in the office rescued him from his perilous position.



Curious Epitaphs.

Close to the principal entrance of old Kirk Braddan (Eng.) churchyard is a stone which probably not one in a thousand of the thousands of visitors who assemble there Sunday after Sunday ever notice. It has engraved upon it the following curious inscription: "Here underlyeth the body of the Rev. Mr. Patrick Thompson, minister of God's Word forty years and present vicar of Kirk Braddan, who died sixty-seven, Anno 1678, deceased 1689." The reverend gentleman had his tombstone erected eleven years before he died. The incident, however, is not so uncommon as would at first appear. There is erected a stone in Onchan (I. O. M.) churchyard, to-day, sacred to the memory of a man who is still alive.

Broke Chain Drawing Him to Death.

By a desperate burst of strength which was as that of three or four men, seventeen-year-old Francis Kelly of Sugar Notch, Pa., managed to save his life. He was caught in the shaft chain at the Hadleigh colliery while cleaning the machinery and dragged toward a big cog wheel. Fellow workers tried in vain to pull him loose. Then to bar off the chain in the few remaining seconds.

Just as Riley was about to fall to the ground to death on the cog wheel he braced himself, seized the big chain with both hands and tore at it with superhuman strength. A link snapped, the chain broke and he was free.

ORCHID RAISERS SING PRAISE.

Rare Specimen Sought for Years Is Found in Tibet.

Great excitement has been caused among orchid collectors by the information that a rare specimen whose habitat for nearly fifty years has been sought in vain has been rediscovered.

There came to London in 1857, from India, a miscellaneous stock of orchids. They were duly sold at auction, and some of them were bought by a Mr. Fairlie of Liverpool. In his possession they bloomed, and one of them was recognized as a variety previously unknown and of singular beauty. It was named after its owner—Cypripedium Fairieanum. The Indian collection contained several other specimens of the same plant and keen was the competition that ensued for their possession. But most of the purchasers simply wasted their money, the plants did not flourish. The original stock dwindled and died. For many years there has been only one specimen in existence among orchid collectors, and a diminutive one at that. But its possession has been sufficient to confer additional distinction on its distinguished owner, Sir Trevor Lawrence, president of the Royal Horticultural Society. The aim of every orchid enthusiast is to get hold of an orchid that nobody else has. Sir Trevor has several times been offered big sums for his puny Fairieanum, but nothing could induce him to part with it.

Whose native haunt on the Tibet border has been rediscovered, after being lost fifty years.

The Tibet expedition, which sought to open up the Forbidden Land to the trade of India, brought back specimens of pretty nearly everything that could be obtained in that grim region. One member of the mission who was a botanist discovered a lot of orchids, which were sent to Calcutta. From thence two of them were dispatched to Kew Gardens. One of them has just flowered and experts have pronounced it the long sought and rediscovered Fairieanum.

Shot Fox with Golf Ball.

Foxes have been trapped, shot and poisoned from pioneer days, but it has remained for Mortimer Fagan of Troy, N. Y., to kill one with a golf ball, and Mr. Fagan is extremely proud of the exploit.

Early in the week Mr. Fagan went out on the links to practice and had made the third tee when a strong head wind came up and he was forced to drive with all his strength to send the gutta percha ball any distance. Just beyond the tee was a natural hazard consisting of a stone pile and a brook, and to clear the latter he struck with all his might.

The ball went a bit low, struck the stone pile, caromed and, bounding over the water, struck in the bushes close to the bank. The instant the ball landed Mr. Fagan heard a weird, peculiar cry, and ran forward. The next instant he came upon a red fox writhing at the edge of the brook. The hard ball had caught him between the eyes as he was drinking and he died before the man reached him.

When Stocks Were in Common Use.

A striking reminder of the times when the laws of the church were a good deal more effective, perhaps, than they are to-day exists at Shoreditch, England, in the shape of hand stocks and a whipping post still preserved as part of the church property.

These may be seen at St. Leonard's Church in Shoreditch, and the church authorities quote from the church records scores of instances where a parental church used to inflict corporal punishment on its erring members.

Keeps Typewriter for Himself.

There is a new idea to protect typewriters from being tampered with. A New York man has had made a keyboard on which there are no letters or figures. The diagram of the keys is printed on a celluloid card, which he places in front of him as one does a piece of music. As long as he keeps his diagram in front of him he can write. When he removes it, neither he nor any one else can operate the machine accurately.

"KING PHILIP'S" SEAT REMOVED.

Connecticut Landmark" Placed in Charge of Amherst College.

Many curious travelers who have heretofore made the long pilgrimage up Sugar Loaf mountain to view "King Philip's Seat" will be pleased at its present location in front of Amherst college.

For centuries Mt. Sugar Loaf has hung out like a flying buttress over the far level plain beneath through which winds the Connecticut.

Sugar Loaf as a geological phenomenon, composed entirely of red sandstone, is attractive, but its great cliff, with its straight mountain face sheering off 300 to 400 feet in depth, is the chief feature. At the southern end of this cliff Pulpit rock stands out sharply over its edge and underneath the far-famed King Philip seat, wh King Philip, the reputed instigator many a bloody attack upon the peaceful villages below, is said to have given his commands to his assembled followers.

Formerly the seat was well defined, but curiosity seekers have chipped away the sides and bottom until nothing but a round hole remains.

There have been several narrow escapes from death by falling on the part of careless sightseers attempting to view the rock, and its present safe location is a welcome change.—Boston Globe.

Comical Scene on London Bus.

It was the upper deck of a London bus. A passenger, a dignified personage, lighted a cigar and threw the match, as he supposed, into the street. A few seconds later he was greatly surprised to find that his umbrella was on fire. At the same instant a sharp gust of wind opened it and carried it like a flaming parachute through the air. Making a sudden grab after his truant property, the passenger overbalanced, plunged headlong over the omnibus rail and after turning a somersault landed upright on the road unhurt.

next to the Kaiser's Chief Chamberlain, the best decorated man in Europe. He possesses 115 stars, orders and ribbons, besides medals galore. A German mathematician the other day reckoned that if the Chancellor wore them all they would cover not only every inch of his breast, but his back as well and overflow down his trousers to the knees.

Siam's King an Ardent Motorist.

The king of Siam is an ardent automobilist, and his "scorching" has worried his ministers, who are anxious about the safety of the royal neck. They presented to their august master the following petition:

"At the service of your majesty there are bearers, and when time presses, carriages. We, therefore, beseech you to give up the use of motor cars, or at least to go at a more moderate pace. This is expected by the dynasty and your people. We have been too much alarmed lately to remain silent."

To which his majesty sententiously replied in a marginal note: "Danger lies not in the motors, but in the hearts of men."

Unwarlike Race of Bees.

A race of bees has been brought to this country—as an experiment by the United States government—that has been found the gentlest in the world. The one great drawback to bee-keeping for most people has been the fear of stings, but recent experiments at Washington have proved the Caucasian bees to be the most remarkable bees in existence for their gentleness.

The bees are not altogether stingless, for they posses this organ so necessary to their welfare, but so seldom do they resort to its use that they are for all practical purposes nonstingless.

Windfalls for Widow.

After the death in 1897 of John Q. A. Olney of Upton, his widow was notified that there was a deposit of $1,600 in a Milford bank. This money had been laid away without the knowledge of Mrs. Olney. A second surprise came to her the other day when workmen began to make repairs on the old Olney cobble shop and found $35 in a tin box under the floor.

NO DOUBT IT WAS HER TRUNK.

If Familiarity of the Contents Went for Anything.

The old lady had lost the check to her trunk, and the depot officials said that she must enumerate the contents and satisfy them that it belonged to her.

"Wall, now," she began, "right on top of everything you'll find a red woolen shirt that I was taking to my brother William. William has rheumatism, and red woolen is powerful good for that."

"What else?"

"Then you come to three new sheets for Aunt Mary, with a new bed quilt for Aunt Sarah. Then there's a calico dress pattern for Aunt Mary's oldest girl, and a catskin cap for Aunt Sarah's oldest boy. Then you come to my clothes. There's a silk dress that has been turned top-to-bottom and made over again, and there's—"

"I think the trunk must be yours," said the baggageman.

"Wall, there's the old corset I bought five years ago, a white skirt that I'm going to put some new trimming on, and an alpaca dress that I may give to Aunt Mary if she hain't growed too stout. Then you'll find—"

"You can have the trunk, ma'am."

"Then you'll find a jar of raspberry jam, a bottle of currant wine and some—"

"Take it along, ma'am—it's your trunk for sure."

"Yes, it's my trunk, but now that you have got me naming the contents I'd like to tell you that there are two pairs of shoes, three pairs of stockings, my last year's bonnet, an extra waist and—"

But the baggageman pulled the trunk around, broke off one of the handles, bent the lock and told her that he wouldn't be responsible for spontaneous combustion if the thing remained there fifteen minutes longer.

A River That Bridges Itself.

For a stretch of twenty-two miles the River Colorado in Texas, has bridged itself with logs of wood, which have jammed so tightly from one bank to the other that even dynamite is powerless to clear a way. It was at first only a slight jam of logs, which three or four men could have dealt with effectively; but it has grown at an enormous rate, and, in some places, has become solid ground, with vegetation and trees growing upon it. Roads have been cut through, over which teams cross from bank to bank as unconcernedly as though a great river was not rolling swiftly underneath. The monster raft has become an object of interest to tourists, but the authorities are taking steps to break up the bridge as soon as possible.—Montreal Herald.

Japanese Girl Has Queer Pet.

Miss Fugi Yoshida, a Japanese young lady now in Boston studying to be a painter, forms most curious attachments, the last being for a small duck, not long emerged from the shell. This square bunch of light yellow down she has loyally christened Admiral Togo and decorated with her own especial color of violet. It is a sight for a pessimist to see these two on a bright morning going for a walk. Miss Fugi, in a short sketching skirt, a white yachting cap on her head, packs up her traps and starts down the path through the fields and the little yellow "Admiral," with a fluttering violet necktie, toddles along after her, quacking as it goes.

Useful Ideas of Two Women.

The idea of the reaper was suggested by a Virginia lady who, in an emergency, tied together two pairs of shears and instructed a negro man how to clip a grass plot. That humble instrument of comfort, so extensively manufactured in America, the safety pin, was the suggestion of her majesty Queen Victoria.

Curious Nest.

The stationmaster of the Great Eastern railway at Southend, England, has discovered under the boarding of one of the points a nest of young hedgehogs, which had apparently suffered no inconvenience from the heavy traffic.

TORPEDO BOAT FOR COMMERCE.

She Will Carry Fresh Herring to Ports on Puget Sound.

The English torpedo boat Albatross, which was offered for sale by the authorities when the navy depot at Esquimault, B. C., was abandoned, has been secured by the Nanaimo fisheries company of Nanaimo, B. C., with the object of running fresh herring to sound markets.

The boat is a very fast craft. She was built some thirty years ago for the Chilian government, and saw service in several South American imbroglios.

Fitted with triple-expansion compound engines, air pumps and watertight compartments, the vessel can be driven at a high rate of speed through or under the water, as opportunity offers in any weather.

Her length over all is 100 feet, with but nine-foot beam, and her appearance lying squat on the water much more resembles a fish than a fish carrier.—Fishing Gazette.

ARM OF THE LAW SUSPENDED.

Quaint Old Custom Still Prevails in English Town.

Citizens of the old Devonshire (Eng.) town of Honiton are immune from arrest until sunset one evening, for while the horse fair is in progress the arm of the law is powerless. This is in continuation of a quaint and picturesque ceremonial which has been handed down from the time of Henry III. When the horse fair begins the town crier, in the gorgeous dress of a beadle of the last century, appears, carrying a pole, at the end of which is a large gilt glove, decked with flowers. Having rung his handbell three times, the crier, in his three-cornered hat, announces, "Oyez, oyez, oyez! The fair is begun; the glove is up; no man can be arrested till the glove is down. God save the king." Each sentenced is chorused by the children standing round, and at the conclusion they scramble for nuts. The glove is taken down at sunset.

World's Smallest Graveyard.

What is said to be the smallest graveyard in the world may be seen at Galashiels, England. For over a hundred years no interments have taken place, and the graveyard may now be styled "no man's land," and a receptacle for rubbish.

The burial place measures 22 ft. by 14 ft. and is surrounded by walls. Of the two tombstones which have survived neglect and abuse, one may be seen on our picture, blocking up the entrance, and the other—a large flat one—may be observed in the center of the graveyard.

Made Good Guide at Night.

Jason Hoover, a farmer of Western Wisconsin, ventured out one very dark night to visit a sick neighbor. His wife followed. The man kept up an incessant conversation, not for entertainment, but that his helpmeet might be guided by his sonorous voice along the treacherous and uncertain path.

Suddenly Farmer Hoover shouted a warning, stumbled and fell heavily. After some grumbling and much assistance from his sympathetic wife, he continued the journey, limping painfully, and rubbing his bruised thigh.

"Jason, you may stop talking," suggested his wife, considerately; "it is easy to follow you now."

Mr. Hover became inquisitive, and was astonished to learn that in rubbing his thigh he had caused the phosphorus to glow, which for a long time had been accumulating on his trousers from the many matches struck there.—New York Herald.

Alcoholic Drink from Rice.

The alcoholic drink used in the province of Che-Kiang, in China, is made from fermented rice. Fermentation is induced by the addition of cakes made of wheat meal. An examination of these cakes by K. Saito shows that the particles of wheat are penetrated through and through by the mycelia of various fungi. Some seven or more different species were found. These fungi grow on the moistened rice, fermentation follows and a yellow liquid with an agreeable odor is produced.

Constable as Violin Maker.

Police Constable Gaskin, who has just retired from the Metropolitan force, has made quite a reputation in musical circles by the hand-made violins he has constructed during his spare time. Some of his instruments have been praised by the finest players, and recently Kubelik paid him a visit, highly commending several that he tried.—London Tit-Bits.

BEAUTIFUL BIRD IS AMERICAN.

Wood Warblers Found on No Other Continent but This.

So small that the casual glance frequently does not reveal their presence, the great family of wood warblers is almost without exception the most brilliantly and strikingly colored of our American bird groups. The lover of the beauties of nature will be well repaid by careful scrutiny of the little jewel-like creatures, either with field glasses or the naked eye, for there are none of them unreasonably timid, and patience will reveal marvels in the way of artistic color combinations.

The wood warbler family is distinctly American. On no other continent in the world is it represented. Some sixty species are included in its classification. For the most part the birds are of ridiculously inadequate proportions to combat with the dangers of the long biannual journey which they make in the effort to obtain the insect food upon which they subsist. Uninformed persons often confuse them with humming birds and wrens. They are inconspicuous in their movements, keeping always in the shelter of the leaves of trees or shrubbery. With several exceptions, notably among them the palm warbler, they rarely alight on the ground, preferring to slip nervously but painstakingly about green upper foliage, removing many small and noxious insects which escape the larger and better known bird workers in the interest of the horticulturist.—Chicago News.

Early Egyptians in France.

There has just been laid before the French Academy of Sciences a well authenticated case of prehistoric Egyptian remains found among the prehistoric remains of ancient Gaul. The connection between Gaul and Egypt was established in this way:

A card of cut flints of the Neolithic period was obtained from Egypt and a card of exactly similar flints found on Riou island, nine miles from Marseilles, was shown with them.

At the spot on the island where these flints were excavated there were found lying nearest the surface some Roman pottery; below that Greek pottery, with Ligurian and Egyptian still lower, and below these again masses of marine shells, pottery and flints different from any yet found.

The remains found go back for at least 5,000 years.—London Globe.

Israel's Golden Candlesticks.

According to recent accounts, the golden candlestick and other articles used in the tabernacle by the children of Israel during their pilgrimage through the wilderness have been recovered from the River Tiber, where they were thrown by the ancient Romans when the sacking of Rome by the Goths seemed imminent.

In the box were discovered many vessels and trumpets which exactly answer the description in the old testament. Should the identification be accepted this candlestick would become one of the most valuable treasures in the world.

The value of the gold alone is more than $30,000, and, in addition, the rich working enhances its value, being of the finest. It stands nearly three feet high.

Stolen Goods Strangely Recovered.

Nineteen years ago the general store at Haynesville, Me., was robbed of a quantity of merchandise. Last week one of the cows belonging to a farmer in that village failed to return to the barn. Search revealed the fact that she had fallen into a big hole in the ground which had been used by the robbers of nineteen years ago as a cache. It was about six feet deep, six feet square and roofed over with logs. These having become decayed, were not strong enough to bear the weight of the cow. All the goods taken were concealed here.

The UNION EDUCATOR says in its last issue: "Editor of 'THE UNION' is sending in subscribers right along. You people over in Chilton county should whoop up 'THE UNION.' Its editor is one of us." Yes, we are, and proud of it, and anything that is in our power to do, we are going to do for this combination of "Unions," viz.: the "Farmers' Union," "the "Union Educator" and "The Union." Come on, boys, and help us; send us a dollar and get your best county paper and the "Union Educator" for a year. Keep posted on your rights and then fight for them.

COTTON ASSOCIATION.

Jumper Killed.

Baltimore, Md.—The cross country runner, Gansevoort, was killed at the seventh jump in the steeplechase Monday, and Jockey Walcott was badly injured. The horse stumbled just before the jump, and not being able to recover, his hind legs caught in the fence and it fell on its head, breaking its neck.

Colonel McCorvey's Lecture.

Troy, Ala.—The closing exercises of the first term of the State Normal College took place Friday night. The main feature of the evening was a well-prepared and instructive lecture by Col. T. C. McCorvey, professor of history in the State University. The subject was "The War Poetry of the South."

A bottle of Prickly Ash Bitters kept in the house and used occasionally means good health to the whole household. Tallassee Drug Store, special agents.

COTTON ASSOCIATION

Letter From President Harvie Jordan Relating to Reorganization.

The annual reorganization and re-election of all the officers of the Southern Cotton Association in all of the cotton growing counties and parishes is near at hand. The election of officers and delegates for all the local sub-divisions, townships, militia districts and school precincts, as they are differently termed in the several States, will take place on the first Saturday in December. Farmers, merchants and bankers are urgently requested to meet on that day at their local meeting points in the various sections of the county and choose from one to five delegates to represent them in their county organization. The county or parish meeting will be held at the county site on December 9th, or the following Saturday. These delegates will then perfect their county organization by the election of officers and the selection of from one to three delegates to represent their county or parish at the general State meetings. The State meetings will be held at the different State capitals on January 3rd, and delegates so chosen by the county organizations on December 9th will elect their State officers for 1906, and also the members of the executive committee of the Southern Cotton Association on the same basis of representation as for 1905. The executive committee of the national organization so chosen will meet at Hot Springs, Ark., on the third Tuesday in January, 1906.

Prompt Attention Urged.

Farmers throughout the cotton belt are urged to promptly attend this call on the first Saturday in December and get the machinery of the local organization in motion. Follow the different meetings up and let the association get on a sound, systematic and substantial basis. Members of the Farmers' Union and other organizations are cordially and earnestly invited to join the association that every farmer in the South may co-operate shoulder to shoulder for the one purpose of handling the great staple crop of the South at profitable prices to the producers. The press is earnestly requested to publish this call.

Very truly,
HARVIE JORDAN,
President Southern Cotton Association. tf

RANDOLPH.

November. "The melancholy days have come, the saddest of the year," we believe is the way the poet describes November. Cotton is a good republican price, and is coming in at a lively rate. Republicanism puts life into business, makes people feel good, makes the blood go tingling through the veins of the American people. The people will cherish the names of Lincoln, Grant, Garfield, McKinley and Roosevelt. A new arrival at Mr. V. L. Hubbard's, a son. Mr. Flit Price reached here from Louisiana last week. Mrs. Shepcere, of Briarfield, has a position as assistant bookkeeper at A. P. Howison's. Mr. D. Martin, of beat 3, came into town Sunday with the remains of his little girl en route to Plantersville for interment. He was accompanied by Commissioner Glasscock, Tax Collector Hubbard, Harvey Nix, J. T. Martin, J. M. Nix and Miss Emma Hubbard. Mr. Dick Day has returned from Louisiana. Mr. Quint Meroney came in from Montgomery Sunday evening on a visit to his mother. Mrs. D. C. Hubbard, of Jemison, is visiting her son, Mr. V. L. Hubbard, at this place. A goodly number of our people went to the fair at Selma last week; also a large number from the Mars Hill and Macedonia communities went down. For two or three days the mail train from Birmingham was well filled with people from this part going to the fair, which proves that prosperity is here. Large crowd in town Saturday. Sam Brantley, the crippled young operator from Ashby, was a welcome visitor Monday. Miss Lois Risinger went to Ashby Saturday night. P. W. Davenport, of Mulberry, was in town Saturday. William Argo and wife were in town Monday. John Argo, section foreman here, has moved into the new section house. J. P. Gentry and wife, of Bessie, were welcome visitors last week. They were en route to Selma. Send on the Union to us just full and overflowing with all the news from every nook and corner of Chilton. The year 1905 is getting old, will soon be gone. Same way with many old people. They have borne the heat and burden of the day; their work is about done, yet how beautiful those old people are who are walking in the way of holiness, their hearts are pure, they are kind and gentle, they are happy, their dress is neat and plain, their whole life is centered on good deeds. Then let all of us improve the few remaining days of 1905. Hoping to meet you all again in the Union circle, we leave you for the present.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

ROCKY MOUNT.

Editor Union:

The health of our community is very good and all are about done gathering. We saw Messrs. Conway, Gray, Glass and Williams all start for south Alabama Saturday and hope they will have a fine time while gone. Well, as this is my first letter to you, I'll quit now and come again later.

A HUSTLER.

MARS HILL.

I've been away for a short while, but am now on deck again. We are about done gathering, and many are sowing, hauling straw and leaves, and building new houses, and last but not least, changing places. J. N. Scott has bought a new buggy. M. S. Scott is moved in his new residence. C. L. Langston is busy preparing to put up his new house. A. J. Scott will soon move to Active, Ala. We regret losing him, but wish him every success in his new home. J. T. Clark will soon move to his place near the church. County Lecturer J. H. Thomas delivered one of his able lectures to a good crowd here on Saturday. After the lecture a short session of the Farmers' Union was held and 15 new members were added to the lodge. Many others would have joined only for the lateness of the hour, but will do so next meeting. All are seeing the benefits or the fruits of the Union, and Bro. Thomas' talk clinched the matter, showing them the good there was in being organized. We are moving along nicely with our Union here. Brethren, let us stick together, and we will surely win. "United we stand, divided we fall" is old, but very true. If you expect the wheel of fortune to turn to you, put your shoulder to it and help it turn. I approached an old man the other day and asked him "Why don't you join the Union?" He said: "Well, I'm too old, yet I believe in it." Friends, you never get too old to do good. Remember that.

DAD'S PLOW BOY.

THORSBY LETTER.

Mrs. Ed Schneider has left for the north, where she intends to spend the winter with her father. The Lafollette family has moved to Decatur, Ala. Amongst the arrivals on last Wednesday's excursion were Mr. Lien and family and Mr. Larson from Black River Falls, Wis., and Mr. Anderson and family from Chicago. The former family is now occupying the Simonton home. Miss Cooley, of Clanton, was the guest of her sister, Mrs. S. A. Collins, on last Saturday. Lawyer T. Mullins, of Clanton, spent Saturday night in Thorsby. Rev. Graham spoke at the Union Protestant church Sunday morning and Sunday night. He is a very able speaker and his sermons were much enjoyed. Prof. Von Fielitz delivered his third lecture in the Swedish Lutheran church on Sunday night. A number of the young people of Clanton visited our florist on Sunday afternoon. Mr. G. W. Phalin spent several days in Thorsby last week. Mrs. Hornsby, of Wetumpka, was a visitor here last week. Mrs. Lane, who is a guest in the home of her brother, P. C. Smith, is spending the week in Montgomery. The Heaton family has moved to Shelby, where Mr. Heaton is engaged in the saw mill business. The ladies of Thorsby surprised Mrs. Hartelius at her home on Tuesday afternoon. The party given by Mr. Bosworth on last Saturday night was thoroughly enjoyed by all present. Sixteen of the guests spent the evening in playing progressive cinch. The remaining guests played other games. Dainty refreshments were served during the evening.

NEMO.

BEAT 9 ITEMS.

We are enjoying a spell of pretty weather. Prof. Harvey Hicks was called by telegram to the bedside of Mrs. Hicks, who is very sick at Avondale. J. M. Poole is at Birmingham looking for work. Lum Waller went to work at Birmingham last week. Messrs. J. R. and G. D. Collins went to Clanton Saturday on business. Mr. Jesse Allen died at his home, about 1 1-2 miles northeast of Thorsby, on the night of the 8th inst., and was buried at Collins Chapel cemetery. Mr. Allen leaves a widow and several children, and his many friends extend their sympathy to the bereaved family. W. H. Wilson and family visited at G. W. Mims' Saturday and Sunday and were entertained in royal style. Mrs. Caroline Childress is convalescing slowly. With best wishes.

NIM ROD.

A SAD CASE.

J. H. Johnson, who was convicted at our last circuit court of murder in the second degree and given a sentence of 13 years, was paroled by Gov. Jelks for a week to enable him to visit his wife, who was very sick. He started from Speigness last Friday and got home 15 minutes before his wife died. Johnson has appealed his case to the supreme court, but preferred to put in his time at Speigners to laying in our county jail. His conduct at the prison is reported "excellent." Rawlinson was the name of the man whom he killed.

NOTICE.

I hereby appoint the 4th Saturday in each month as my regular day for hearing civil causes at my residence in beat 3, Chilton Co. Deeds, mortgages and papers of all kinds carefully and legibly made out.

DEATH OF DR. JAMES W. MIMS.

James W. Mims died of heart failure at Ramsey in Sumpter county on Oct. 31, 1905, aged 38 years. The deceased was the only son of former Tax Assessor A. C. Mims, and the body was brought here and interred in Pleasant Grove cemetery Nov. 2. Dr. Mims had been in Ramsey for some time, and was in partnership with Dr. S. S. Swain, who writes his father that "Jim" had been doing very well in his practice, and was also attending church and Sunday school regularly. "After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well."

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

Rev. Job Reynolds, the father of our judge, was in Clanton Saturday, accompanied by his elder brother, J. W. Reynolds. The main cause of their visit was to attend the session of the county school board, and the line between Concord and Free Springs school districts is now definitely fixed "for keeps." Mr. Reynolds is now living with his second wife and has 3 children, the youngest 5 years old; of the children by his first wife 9 are living, the eldest being our Probate Judge, and the preacher says, "though the first crop are all good children, and every one of them belong to a church, I'm going to raise the second crop that they will beat the first." (Pretty hard to do that.) He also has 29 grand children, and though his hair is white with the frost of age, he is bubbling over with youthfulness, and it is very interesting to hear him talk of past times.

Downs and Littlejohn have got a new lot of shoes and boots in, which they bought extra cheap and are selling them the same way.

W. T. House and wife were in Clanton Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Curlee and their baby (the handsomest baby in 17 states) were in Clanton Thursday.

R. M. Foshee was a pleasant visitor Thursday.

J. C. Jones is doing a rushing business these days. He has a mighty fine line of clothing.

T. J. Dupree, who moved from here to Natural Bridge, Winston Co., last February to engage in the mill business, was killed in his mill several weeks ago. His clothing caught in the saw and drew him under it. Mrs. Dupree and her two children have come to live with her father near Thorsby. Her maiden name was Miss Mollie Moore.

J. H. Teel was a welcome caller Friday. He is one of our new citizens at Lomax and a good one, too.

Do you want a good wagon? Then go to W. I. Mullins and get a "Studebaker." We know THEY are good.

Mrs. C. I. Ellison, who has been visiting her father, W. L. McDowell, returned to her home in Rome, Ga.

J. W. G. Kicker and daughters, the Misses Zora and Sallye, were in Clanton Saturday. Mr. Kicker is a believer in higher priced cotton, having bought over 100 bales which he is holding for 15 cents.

A. J., C. L. and J. H. Glasscock, R. T. Robinson, W. H. Thrash, C. M. Northcutt, J. B. Campbell and J. A. Campbell were in Clanton Saturday.

J. P. Williams was a pleasant visitor Tuesday.

I. A. Patrick was burned out at Haynes Saturday. Total loss, the family being away from home. No insurance. Mr. Patrick had just moved there from Popwell's Mill.

J. C. Grimes was in Clanton Tuesday. He was after a doctor for his son Walter, who is very sick. We hope the young man will soon be better.

P. D. Wilson and N. D. Kicker are on a huting trip in the Coosa Valley.

W. M. Wilson went to Montgomery Wednesday.

Omar Reynolds, the little son of Judge Reynolds, celebrated his seventh birthday Tuesday with an informal dinner party, at which the "piece de resistance" was roast goose. Omar raised the bird himself and had it fattened to the "queen's taste." Many happy returns of the day, Omar.

SOUTHERN COTTON ASSOCIATION

Chilton Co. Sub-Division.

To Farmers, Landlords and Tenants:

At the meeting of the executive committee of the S. C. A. at Asheville, N. C., the assessment on every bale of cotton grown by members was placed at 3 cents.

At a meeting of the Chilton Co. association the county ex. committee was empowered to enforce this assessment.

The amount is small, and it is hoped that those even not members will co-operate in raising it.

The association has already added millions to the wealth of our country and the price of cotton would likely now rule at 8 cents but for it. The public ginneries are authorized to collect this 3 cents per bale.

THE FARMERS AND THE TRUSTS.

Of all producers the farmer is all hardest by the Trusts. They catch him coming and going. And the Trust lives and grows because of railroad rebates, the "protective" tariff, and national bank control of our money system. Evidently the remedy is to cut off these special favors which build up and perpetuate the Trust.

Tom Watson's Magazine,

"the Magazine with a purpose back of it," was established to teach the best way of abolishing these special privileges, and, hence, of rendering the Trusts powerless to rob the public. It is a big monthly magazine of 128 pages, with illustrations, cartoons, Mr. Watson's brilliant editorials, special articles, a serial story, novelettes, short stories and poems, by the world's best writers. Regular price, $1.00 per year; 10 cents the copy, at all news stands. Every farmer is interested in knowing the best way to cure the Trust evil and how to bring it about. Now in its second volume, Tom Watson's Magazine is firmly established, and its circulation is growing rapidly; but we want to add a hundred thousand subscribers to our list in the next month or two.

Send Us Three Names,

Or five of you may club together, sending a dollar bill and 25 good names and addresses, and get five trial trip subscriptions. Learn how to clip the Trust's wings. Address

THE SAGE.

Forguarded and unfevered and serene,
Back to the perilous gates of truth he went—
Back to fierce wisdom and the Orient,
To the dawn that is, that shall be, and has been;
Previsioned of the madness and the mean
He stood where Asia, crowned with ravishment,
The curtain of love's inner shrine had rent,
And after had gone scarred by the unseen.

There at his touch there was a treasure chest,
And in it was a gleam, but not of gold;
And on it, like a flame, these words were scrolled:
"I keep the mintage of eternity.
Who comes to take one coin may take the rest,
And all may come—but not without the key."

—Edward Arlington Robinson.

A Double Identity

By Mary Wickham.

YES, it was a foregone conclusion.

All their friends knew they would marry.

Even the mothers on both sides agreed they were made for each other, so thorough was the sympathy between them.

George put his thoughts into his pictures. They spoke such feeling and love that they sold tremendously and made his name famous.

Now, Gladys had one secret.

She wrote poetry, but was so diffident about her verses that she had not told her lover. She also was obliged to take the world into her confidence. Like Mrs. Browning, her sonnets, under the title of "Sylvia's Love," brought her fame and renown.

One day the book fell into George's hands, and then arose the misunderstanding.

By intuition he felt they were written for him. Loyalty to Gladys and love for Sylvia fought in his heart day by day, making him morose and gloomy. Finally his visits grew few and far between.

Gladys noticed his preoccupation and began to fret. Had she been too bold in telling the world of her love? Could he have discovered the authorship of the sonnets?

Pride kept her tongue tied and the meetings of the lovers grew fewer and colder.

All the world wondered and remarked at the estrangement.

"How pale Gladys looks, George," said his mother anxiously. "Do you think she is fretting?"

He gulped down a great cup of coffee, scalding himself in the endeavor.

"I—er—have not noticed, mother," he said, with averted face.

"Have you quarreled?" she queried.

"No, mother. Whatever put that thought in your head?"

"I could not imagine a quarrel," replied his mother, "because you seemed to understand one another so thoroughly. Surely you have not grown tired of each other?"

"I do wish you would not interfere with my affairs," exclaimed her son petulantly, pushing his chair away from the table. "Poor little Gladys," he muttered, going upstairs. "Ought I to tell her how I feel?"

Left to herself, his mother sighed. "How unlike George!" she said. "I wish I could do something."

* * * * * * *

"Gladys," asked her mother, "what is the matter with you? You never eat anything and you are getting as pale as a ghost. Has George been unkind to you?"

Gladys burst into tears.

"I do not know, mother," she faltered. "I fear George is getting tired of me, and I did think he loved me."

She looked tearfully out of the window, where a brown thrush was warbling to his mate from a wild cherry tree.

"I thought you were made for each other," answered her mother thoughtfully. "I cannot think that about George. Why do you not ask him? It would be better to break the engagement than live forever miserable."

"I hardly like to ask him," said the girl hesitatingly. "Yet would sooner break it off if he has really grown tired of me. Only it will be so horrid!"

One afternoon George came in.

Gladys was alone at tea. Polite but cold greetings took place.

Yes, George would take a cup of tea, and "Ah, thank you, two lumps, please!"

In the old days Gladys was quite aware of his sugar-loving propensities. But his stern, set face made her harden her heart, though it was beating very tumultuously. She had determined to have it out before George bade her farewell.

Strangely enough, George had made his visit for the same purpose.

"George."

"Gladys."

"I beg your pardon, Gladys, what were you going to say?"

Poor Gladys broke down.

"Oh, George, dear," she cried hysterically, "do not be so horribly polite. What is the matter with you? What has changed you? Have I offended you, or"—she hesitated—"have you grown tired of me?"

"No, no, Gladys," he answered hastily; "I love you dearly. But," he added, looking rather foolish, "I love some one else equally as well."

"Oh, George!" cried the girl, with a scarlet face, "how can you talk so? Who is she?"

"I do not know. I do not even know her name, though I have tried hard to discover it."

"But I do not understand," she commented, looking at him in bewilderment.

"It is just this: She is the writer of some lovely poems—poems which I should like a woman to write for me. I feel in love with you, Gladys, because of the strong affinity between us on many subjects. When it comes to the greatest of all themes you are dumb and I am the lover. The love is all on my side."

"George, dear, I could not speak," she said, trembling, "but I——"

He went on regardless of her interruption.

"Now, this woman inspires me. I feel she is my ideal woman. I talk to her and I con over her poems as I paint. Yet all the while I am thinking of you and wishing you could speak so."

He paced up and down the room and then sat down by her side.

"Why," he cried, taking a little hand and fondling it, "I am so crazed that I am actually painting a picture to my unknown ideal. I have called it 'Who is Sylvia?'" He did not notice her glad start of wonder and recognition, but went on musingly. "I have put a troubadour under a balcony. He is looking up to a window, where a hand is opening the casement.

"Why do you laugh?" he added shortly. "I am quite serious."

Gladys laughed long and merrily. She knelt down by his side.

"You dear, silly boy," she cried; "your Sylvia may be a faded, gray-haired old lady, lamenting the lost love of her youth, or she may be a happily married dame with a merry troop of children. Perhaps she is a man like the writer of 'An English Woman's Love Letters,' or she may be an impossible person. A soul does not always dwell under a beautiful covering."

"If I thought any of your suggestions were true," said George, dubiously, "I——"

"Would keep to the old one?" she said, coaxingly. "George, dear, you said you loved me once and promised to marry me. . . . You are the only man I ever cared for." She looked wistfully at him. "Do not throw me over for a mere caprice or fancy. If we have loved once it should be for aye, for true love can never alter."

"Now you are talking like Sylvia," answered George, softly, gazing at her.

She certainly looked very sweet with the love-light brimming in her pretty eyes. After all, the writer of the poems might turn out to be a dyspeptic. Most of the minor poets he knew were afflicted in that way.

"George, dear," she whispered, "it would be so awful to change now we have fixed the day—that is, if you still love the Gladys you imagined me to be."

"I know, darling. I have been a brute. Forgive me," he said contritely. "I will read Sylvia no more. I will imagine you are at the casement, and I will give you the picture for a wedding present."

He kissed and fondled her as he spoke. He could see how unhappy she looked.

"And I," she answered, shyly, blushing under his kisses, "will give you my present on the morning after we are married."

George kept to his word and his sweetheart.

The onlookers declared, therefore a lovers' quarrel had been made up.

The day of the wedding had arrived. Everything passed off beautifully, until, at the supreme moment, George suddenly remembered Sylvia and shuddered. The girl at his side pressed closer and gave him a pathetic little glance.

At the breakfast he appeared quite distrait, and the guests commented on his preoccupied air.

He talked to his newly made wife with a great effort for the rest of the day, but she only smiled tenderly at him and would not notice anything amiss in his unloverlike behavior.

At breakfast the next morning he still appeared ill at ease. In reality he felt ashamed of himself. Sylvia had filled his dreams all night.

"George, dear husband," said Gladys, at the end of the silent meal, "I have left your present on the dressing table. Will you go and look at it." She flushed painfully as she spoke. Surely a woman should not need to woo her husband!

"Certainly," he answered, glad of an opportunity of escaping from his uncomfortable position.

He hurried up stairs, where he walked to the dressing-table, and found a copy of "Sylvia's Love." It bore the inscription: "From the writer, Gladys, to her only love."

In the meantime Gladys had walked to the window. There she watched the play of a wave-kissed blue sea sparkling with sunshine. And there George found her.

He put his arm about her and drew her to his side with a tender, clinging caress. Once more he was the dear George of old. She knew no shadow of misunderstanding would ever come between them again.

Presently he spoke. "Write me," he said, slowly, "as one of the biggest fools in creation. I ought to have guessed you were my Sylvia. How could I have been so blind! My darling! I hope I may ever prove worthy of such love—the love of my ideal woman!"

She smiled at him through happy tears as their lips met in one long kiss.—American Queen.

No Business.

"You have no business in politics," Thus spoke the Dictator angrily.

"I know I haven't," said the Rich Young Candidate. "I do not own a street railway or an insurance company or a food trust or anything like that. Having no business in politics I feel all the better fitted to be a faithful public servant."—Newark News.

RHYMING PUZZLES.

I know a very ancient game,
Now see if you can guess;
Its name begins with che
And ends with double S.

The horseman, the parson,
The king and his wife,
All went to battle,
And fought for dear life.

The dwarfs ran ahead,
But the king was afraid,
And back of his castle
He prudently stayed,

Till a horseman came jumping
Right over the house,
And caught the poor king
In a trap like a mouse.

GLADSTONE AND THE LOVERS.

About twenty years ago a shoemaker came to London and established a small workshop, but in spite of industry and strict attention to business he continued so poor that he had not even enough money to buy leather for work which had been ordered.

One day he was in the whispering gallery of St. Paul's Cathedral, with his betrothed wife, to whom he confided the sad condition of his affairs, and the impossibility of their marriage. The young girl gave him all her small earnings, with which he went next day to purchase the required leather, without, however, knowing that he was followed by a gentleman commissioned to make inquiries about him.

The shoemaker was not a little surprised when the leather merchant told him he was willing to open a small account with him. In this way did fortune begin to smile upon him, and soon, to his great astonishment, he received orders from the wealthiest circle in London society, and his business became so well established that he was able to marry, and have a comfortable home of his own.

He was known in London for years as the "Parliament Shoemaker," but only when, to please his German wife, he left London for Berlin, did the leather merchant tell him that he owed his "credit account" to none other than Mr. Gladstone. The Cabinet Minister had been in the whispering gallery when the poor shoemaker had been telling his betrothed of his poverty, and, owing to the peculiar acoustics of the gallery, had heard every word that had been said.—British Weekly.

THE GAME OF AUTHORS.

At our book club the other afternoon we varied our usual serious discussion of weighty problems by a little literary game that I think it may help to pass on for the cousins. I do not think the young people in the country live up to their opportunities for social amusements, and I would suggest that we have a discussion of ways and means in Social Chat. What do you say to that, Aunt Jennie? Here is the game—with the answers—to which I have referred. Read the descriptions and see how many authors can be guessed:

THE OBSERVING ROBIN.

I once observed a robin boring for grubs in a country doorway, says John Burroughs, in Outing. It is a common enough sight to witness one seize an angle worm and drag it from its burrow in the turf, but I am not sure that I ever before saw one drill for grubs and bring the big white morsel to the surface.

The robin I am speaking of had a nest of young in a maple nearby, and she worked the neighborhood very industriously for food. She would run along over the short grass after the manner of robins, stopping every few feet, her form stiff and erect. Now and then she would suddenly bend her head toward the ground and bring eye and ear for a moment to bear intently upon it. Then she would spring to boring the turf vigorously with her bill, changing her attitude at each stroke, alert and watchful, throwing up the grass roots and little jets of soil, stabbing deeper and deeper, growing every moment more and more excited, till finally a fat grub was seized and brought forth. Time after time during several days I saw her mine for grubs in this way and drag them forth.

How did she know where to drill? The insect was in every case an inch below the surface. Did she hear it gnawing the roots of the grasses or did she see a movement in the turf beneath which the grub was at work? I know not. I only know that she struck her game unerringly each time. Only twice did I see her make a few thrusts and then desist, as if she had been for the moment deceived.

—From Brooklyn Daily Eagle.

A STIRRUP RACE.

This new athletic pastime is a very amusing "event," and is "run off" with one leg hobbled to the broomstick, which takes its place. A look at the accompanying drawing will show you how to prepare for the stirrup race.

Procure a long, thin pole. Then attach the leather or rope stirrup, which can be easily prepared by making a noose in one end and tying the other end to the upper part of the stick. The stirrup should be about four feet long, so you will have no difficulty in throwing it over your shoulder.

The rules are very simple. The suspended foot in the stirrup must not touch the ground nor the stirrup length be removed from its position over the shoulder. A hundred-yard "dash" will be plenty long enough for the course.

Four negroes are in the service of the imperial family of Russia.

BEAUTY IN THE HOME.

A day or two ago an errand led me into the apartment of a well-to-do tradesman's family in an Eastern city and I was duly conducted to the "parlor," to await the mistress of the house. The furnishings of the room represented a fair amount of outlay, but the result was barren and unsatisfactory. On the mantel were some rather expensive and very ugly china vases holding pampas grass and crystallized flowers. There was a profusion of Dresden china figures—a shepherdess, a grotesque boy, a satyr and other meaningless trifles. The upholstered chairs and the sofa were smothered in cushions and in embroidered and befrilled "tidies." The shades were two-thirds down the windows, and the moreen curtains were almost drawn over the aperture. There was the regulation marble topped table under the chandelier, and on it lay a closed photograph album, a book of "views," representing, in woodcuts, various landscapes and buildings, and some knicknacks. On the walls were hung various family photographs and tawdry prints. There was an open piano, some Swiss wood-carvings and a beaded creation swinging from the chandelier.

For half the money that had been expended on that room there might have been beauty and life. First, one would have rolled the shades to the top of the windows, taken down the dull moreen curtains, and, at half their cost, replaced them with airy muslin, or fancy "scrim," which costs only some twelve cents a yard and comes in soft amber and pale blue, green or rose, giving a delicate tint of color. Even the ordinary cheesecloth, at three cents a yard, will drape prettily into curtains, giving a faint ecru shade. The money wasted in the meaningless china ornaments and trivialties would have purchased a number of good books and photogravures of noble and significant works of art.

When we come to the consideration of principal art in the home of refined taste and modest income, it must mean largely, reproductions of pictures and photographs of sculpture. The art of reproduction is now becoming worthy of rank as a fine art in itself. The photogravure is a soft, harmonious and sympathic process of reproducing a picture, and within the past few months great advance has been made in the photography of color.—Lillian Whiting, in Home and Flowers.

FOR THE DEBUTANTE.

It is not necessary as yet to order a debutante's reception gown, but if ways and means are to be at all taken into consideration it is well to commence immediately to watch out for special sales in silk, chiffon and lace, so that when tthe dress is to be made the material will be on hand or at any rate the texture and trimming will have been decided upon. White is generally accepted as alone to be thought of for this reception frock, so there is no worry about what shade will prove most becoming.

For the afternoon gown there is no one material more fashionable than another, but soft clinging silks and chiffons will be more likely to prove becoming to a young girl than would stiff satin or cloth. Rajah is as attractive in white and cream as in the colors, and is one of the most fashionable of all soft silks seen this season. The many varieties of soft satin and satin finished silks are one and all popular, while embroidered crepe de chine is now worn as much by the debutante as her mother. Plain crepes, lace trimmed, are so serviceable and becoming as never to go wholly out of fashion, while chiffon and chiffon cloth, particularly the latter, are made up in the newest and most fascinating French models. Lace robe dresses wear splendidly—provided, of course, that the robe is not of too inexpensive quality—and while by many considered rather old for the debutante, are nevertheless used a great deal for this purpose. Lace and chiffon, about even parts of both, made exceptionally attractive gowns, each setting off the other to advantage.

Of late years the once popular debutante's frock of finest organdy or French mousseline trimmed simply with flounces and ruffles of Valenciennes lace has not been seen, but it is a pity to discard this style of gown, for there is nothing so becoming or appropriate, and a dress of this description can be every bit as expensive and as handsome as the most fussily embroidered cloth dress. As a mousseline dress would scarcely be appropriate for winter wear it could be made with a lace yoke, which when taken out would leave a charmingly attractive evening gown. All possible pains must be taken with the dress to keep it as dainty as possible and yet it should be quite distinct from any gown in the summer trousseau.—Washington Times.

WOMEN WHO WORK.

An Eastern prelate recently in a discourse on the value of education as applied to women expressed the opinion that 'Every woman no matter what her wealth or position in society, should, at least for a time, become self-supporting and should make her living independently, at least for a time."

He pointed to the profession teaching as probably the noblest, he stated, moreover that "fortunately there are open to women many ways in which she may become self-supporting and at the same time fit herself for the very highest and noblest of all duties, the woman's true sphere—the home."

We cannot entirely concur in opinion. In the first place, women who are not driven by necessity to work, when they enter the ranks of amateur bread-winners stand in the way of other women who are compelled by regrettable circumstances to earn their own living. We also think trustworthy information of this character of women to whom working is merely a pastime, and who spend the money they earn, not for necessities but for luxuries.—Men and Women.

WHAT A WISE WOMAN KNOWS.

That a kind word put at interest brings back an enormous percentage of love and appreciation.

That though a loving thought may not seem to be appreciated it may yet made her braver and better in the cause of it.

That to be always polite to people at home it not only makes womanly and sweet but more refined than having "company" manners.

That to learn to talk pleasantly about nothing in particular is a great art, and prevents saying anything one might regret.

That to talk, and talk, and talk about herself and her belongings is very tiresome to people who like her.

That to be witty at the expense of somebody else is positive cruelty.

That personalties are not always interesting and very often tiresome as well as offensive.

That the ability to keep a friend is of much more value than that required to gain one.—New York Press.

SNAKESKIN MOTOR COATS.

The skin of the anaconda is the latest novelty in the dress of motorists. It is replacing the beaver which has heretofore been the favorite attire of women devotees of the car.

The snakeskin coat is an elegant production, three-quarter length, in delicate shades of cream color or brown, with cuffs and collar of velvet and lined with brown satin. Although anaconda skins are not difficult to obtain, there is much trouble in matching the skins.

Four skins make a coat, and the great point in the material's favor is its lightness. It is flexible and soft, and in durability is practically everlasting. Its bright and scaly surface is never dulled and will not wear out. It is several degrees warmer than any known fur and is therefore sure to achieve popularity.—London Cable to the New York American.

MEN'S HEROINES.

One of the most infallible signs of an average man's work is an extravagantly beautiful heroine, who generally also contrives to be beautifully dressed, at least as her creator fondly imagines. At any rate, a penniless man does not make a penniless or nearly penniless girl dress as if she had a hundred pounds a year to spend on her wardrobe. A man drawing a very young girl almost invariably makes out that she has eaten far too much of the fruit of the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil, as much as he himself would have eaten at a similar age, for instance, which is altogether absurd.—Constanme Barnicoat, in The Look.

FROM TEXAS.

Some Coffee Facts From the Lone Star State.

From a beautiful farm down in Texas, where gushing springs unite to form babbling brooks that wind their sparkling way through flowery meads, comes a note of gratitude for delivery from the coffee habit.

"When my baby boy came to me five years ago I began to drink Postum Food Coffee, having a feeling that it would be better for him and me than the old kind of drug-laden coffee. I was not disappointed in it, for it enabled me, a small, delicate woman, to raise a bouncing healthy baby 14 months.

"I have since continued the use of Postum, for I have grown fond of it, and have discovered to my joy that it has entirely relieved me of a bilious habit which used to prostrate me two or three times a year, causing much discomfort to my family and suffering to myself.

"My brother-in-law was cured of chronic constipation by leaving off the old kind of coffee and using Postum. He has become even more fond of it than he was of the old coffee.

"In fact, the entire family, from the latest arrival (a 2-year-old, who always calls for his 'potie' first thing in the morning), up to the head of the house, think there is no drink so good or so healthful as Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

E. E. Pitts, 60 Hathaway St., Skowhegan, Me., says: "Seven years ago my back ached and I was so run down that I was laid up four months. I had night sweats and fainting spells and dropped to 90 pounds. The urine passed every few minutes with intense pain and looked like blood. Dropsy set in and the doctors decided I could not live. My wife got me using Doan's Kidney Pills, and as they helped me so I took heart, kept on and was cured so thoroughly that I've been well three years."

The outbuildings are models, and an idea of their general construction can be had from the statement that Mr. Donald has a pig sty costing $5,000.

Captain W. S. Graham, 1321 Eoff St., Wheeling, W. Va., writing under date of June 14, '04, says: "I am so grateful I want to thank God that a friend recommended Cuticura Soap and Ointment to me. I suffered for a long time with sores on my face and back. Some doctors said I had blood poison, and others that I had barbers' itch. None of them did me any good, but they all took my money. My friends tell me my skin now looks as clear as a baby's, and I tell them all that Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment did it."

BOX OF WAFERS FREE—NO DRUGS—CURES BY ABSORPTION.

Cures Belching of Gas—Bad Breath and Sad Stomach—Short Breath—Dizziness—Sour Eructations—Irregular Heart, Etc.

Take a Mull's Wafer any time of the day or night, and note the immediate good effect on your stomach. It absorbs the gas, disinfects the stomach, kills the poison germs and cures the disease. Catarrh of the head and throat, unwholesome food and overeating make bad stomachs. Scarcely any stomach is entirely free from taint of some kind. Mull's Anti-Belch Wafers will make your stomach healthy by absorbing foul gases which arise from the undigested food and by re-enforcing the lining of the stomach, enabling it to thoroughly mix the food with the gastric juices. This cures stomach trouble, promotes digestion, sweetens the breath, stops belching and fermentation. Heart action becomes strong and regular through this process.

Discard drugs, as you know from experience they do not cure stomach trouble. Try a common-sense (Nature's) method that does cure. A soothing healing sensation results instantly.

FROM GIRLHOOD TO WOMANHOOD

Mothers Should Watch the Development of Their Daughters—Interesting Experiences of Misses Borman and Mills.

Every mother possesses information which is of vital interest to her young daughter.

Too often this is never imparted or is withheld until serious harm has resulted to the growing girl through her ignorance of nature's mysterious and wonderful laws and penalties.

Girls' over-sensitiveness and modesty often puzzle their mothers and baffle physicians, as they so often withhold their confidence from their mothers and conceal the symptoms which ought to be told to their physician at this critical period.

When a girl's thoughts become sluggish, with headache, dizziness or a disposition to sleep, pains in back or lower limbs, eyes dim, desire for solitude; when she is a mystery to herself and friends, her mother should come to her aid, and remember that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will at this time prepare the system for the coming change, and start the menstrual period in a young girl's life without pain or irregularities.

Hundreds of letters from young girls and from mothers, expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for them, have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., at Lynn, Mass.

Miss Mills has written the two following letters to Mrs. Pinkham, which will be read with interest:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (First Letter.)

"I am but fifteen years of age, am depressed, have dizzy spells, chills, headache and backache, and as I have heard that you can give helpful advice to girls in my condition, I am writing you."—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:— (Second Letter.)

"It is with the feeling of utmost gratitude that I write to you to tell you what your valuable medicine has done for me. When I wrote you in regard to my condition I had consulted several doctors, but they failed to understand my case and I did not receive any benefit from their treatment. I followed your advice, and took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am now healthy and well, and all the distressing symptoms which I had at that time have disappeared."—Myrtle Mills, Oquawka, Ill.

Miss Matilda Borman writes Mrs. Pinkham as follows:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound my monthlies were irregular and painful, and I always had such dreadful headaches.

"But since taking the Compound my headaches have entirely left me, my monthlies are regular, and I am getting strong and well. I am telling all my girl friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—Matilda Borman, Farmington, Iowa.

If you know of any young girl who is sick and needs motherly advice, ask her to address Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., and tell her every detail of her symptoms, and to keep nothing back. She will receive advice absolutely free, from a source that has no rival in the experience of woman's ills, and it will, if followed, put her on the right road to a strong, healthy and happy womanhood.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound holds the record for the greatest number of cures of female ills of any medicine that the world has ever known. Why don't you try it?

ANIMAL SURGERY HAZARD.

THOSE WHO OPERATE ON WILD BEASTS HAVE TO BE CAREFUL.

Removing a Bullet from the Leg of a Bengal Tiger at the Hackensack Meadow Hostelry for Wild Animals —Sharp Knife and Steady Hand Needed.

A surgical operation on a wild animal requires as much care and attention as does one on a human patient is likely to operate on them. the latter case all the knowledge and experience of surgeons and nurses are exercised for the benefit of the sick man. But when it comes to animal surgery the doctor and his assistants must watch sharp, or the patient is likely to operate on them.

The beasts of the field, the forest and the jungle are not liable to all the ailments of mankind, and when they are sick, as a rule they do not need particularly delicate treatment. One can hardly imagine an elephant undergoing an operation for appendicitis ,or a hippopotamus experiencing Dr. Lorenz's method of bloodless surgery. The ills of savage beasts are much like those of domestic animals, although the former do not take to doctoring as kindly as the latter. Sometimes the claws of a member of the feline tribe will grow so long from lack of use that they will curl under and the sharp ends will enter the animal's flesh. Occasionally a wild animal that carries the marks of the hunter will be captured alive. Months or years before a bullet has lodged in its body, but failed to find a vital spot. Howling with pain and rage, the savage beast escapes to its lair, but only to be taken in a trap at some other time. When it finally reaches Europe or this country, it may be found advisable to extract the bullet.

An operation of this nature was performed recently at Bartel's wild animal farm, on the Hackensack meadows. A fine Bengal tiger, which had just arrived with a large shipment of animals from Singapore, had a large lump on one of its legs, being the cause, apparently, for the animal limping slightly. It was thought that the lump was probably caused by a bullet being imbedded in the flesh, and it was decided to operate so that the cause of the trouble, whatever it might be, could be removed. Frank Healey, the animal trainer, with a corps of assistants, undertook the task.

Mr. Tiger, being a new comer, was very suspicious, and he kept in the rear of the cage. His only response to pet names and much coaxing on the part of the keepers was a series of fierce snarls. But at last he was tempted to approach the bars by a piece of meat, and he unwittingly stepped into a rope noose that had been spread on the floor of the cage. One of the keepers quickly yanked the noose tight, so that one of the animal's legs was caught fast. Four or five men then dragged Mr. Tiger, who freely voiced his displeasure, to the front of the cage. The captured foreleg was hauled through the bars.

The next important step, as a matter of precaution, was to tag the gentleman from India. This was done by stuffing into his mouth the end of an iron scraper bound with cloths, the padding providing something for Mr. Tiger to bite on without injuring himself. A keeper held the iron bar in place throughout the operation. After several efforts the other leg was lassoed, and that also was drawn through the bars. Trainer Healey lost no time in making an incision in the beast's injured leg, and without great trouble dug out a large lump of lead. Healey, who speaks from experience in such matters, said the missile was about the size used in elephant guns, and that the only explanation for the tiger's leg not being broken was that the force of the bullet must have been almost spent when the missile hit the animal.

When the operation was over Mr. Tiger was quickly released and he beat a hasty retreat to the rear of the cage, from where he told his keepers what he thought of them. After his anger had diminished he set to licking the wound, which healed in a few days, and the next customer who came to the farm failed to observe the faintest kind of a limp.—Newark Sunday Call.

FRUIT GROWING.

Importance of California's Great Industry.

There is not in the United States, or probably in the world, any other country of the same size which produces fruit so varied in character or of such uniform excellence as California. There is no valuable fruit product of the temperate zone or subtropical zone which is not produced in this State in commercial quantities and shipped, if it will endure shipment, to all parts of the world. The largest single item is that of citrus fruits, of which the amount shipped out of the State during the present citrus year will reach 30,000 carloads of twelve tons each, and the output for next season will be considerably larger. Oranges are produced in commercial quantities from Butte county, about 150 miles north of San Francisco, to the southern border of the State. They are grown for family use almost anywhere in the State below the altitude of 2,000 feet. Thus far about nine-tenths of the oranges shipped out of the State are grown south of the Tehachapi range, where the industry has been well established for a quarter of a century. Orange growing, however, is rapidly extending along the foothills of the Sierra in the northern counties wherever the soil is suitable and water for irrigation available. The orange is a thirsty tree and requires water during the summer and autumn if good fruit is expected.

North of Tehachapi the fruits are mostly deciduous—prunes, apples, apricots, peaches, raisin and other grapes predominating. These fruits are raised to some extent in the southern counties, but the north produces fully nine-tenths of our total output. The tenderest fruits produced in the State are almonds and apricots, owing to their habit of very early blooming. Almonds always, and apricots usually, in the earlier districts, are in bloom in February. The earliest districts for all fruits, including citrus fruits, are in some of the northern counties, the northern orange crop being mostly marketed before the southern oranges are sweet. This always seems queer to our Eastern friends, but it is the fact. The aggregate value of our decidious fruit products, mostly raised at the north, is difficult to estimate, because by far the greater part is shipped dried, canned, or as wine or brandy. Of fresh fruits we shall this year ship about 9,500 carloads of twelve tons, of which about 2,500 carloads will be apples, largely exported to Europe. Our shipments out of the State, last year, of dried fruits, including prunes, canned prunes, canned fruits and raisins, were 34,888 carloads of twelve tons. As each carload of the concentrated product represented about four carloads of the fresh fruit, our total merchantable output of deciduous fruits was about 140,000 carloads of twelve tons. That is a great business.—San Francisco Chronicle.

PRESIDENT ELIOT AT HOME.

The Impressive Simplicity in Which The Head of Harvard Lives.

There is an impressive simplicity about the outside of the small brick house in which the venerable president of Harvard University lives. The patches of old-fashioned flowers, the vines hanging on the walls, the green lawn clustered with dead leaves, the frisking squirrels, the sentimental beach tree before the door, with its pan of water for the birds, and in the distance the huddle and mass of buildings crowded with thousands of students, seen dimly through the trees—these are the surroundings of Dr. Eliot's little home.

When I entered the door Dr. Eliot came promptly to meet me, not even knowing my name or business. Nothing could be more democratic or amiable. The gray eyes shone with kindly welcome, the handclasp was warm, his whole manner blended dignity and courtesy.

This is the great scholar and moral leader, who, after seventy years of life, thirty-six years of which have been spent at the head of Harvard University—an office openly coveted even by President Roosevelt—has, in the teeth of civilization given over to the pursuit of money, declared that the only durable satisfactions in life have nohing to do with the attainment of wealth.

He would not add a word to his lofty address to the Harvard students. But he declared that next month he would speak publicly about great wealth as a life object.

The clean, honorable, chivalrous, industrious life for which Dr. Eliot made such a powerfully beautiful plea to the students of Harvard is well illustrated in his own person today.

He is seventy years old, and has worked hard all his life. Yet he is as erect, as light of foot, and as alert as a youth. He keeps up with the news of the day, discusses events keenly, has a sunny, glancing wit and is free from cynicism and uncharitableness usually attendant upon old age. Knowing men and boys, he has a good opinion of the human race. He eats well, sleeps well, walks rapidly, with his shoulders thrown back, and is as eager to get new facts as when he entered Harvard as a student fifty-six years ago.

"I am satisfied with the rewards of my life," he said very simply.—New York World.

Courting, Old Style.

There is not a country-bred man or woman now living but will tell you that life can offer nothing comparable with the innocent zest of that old style of courting that was done at singing school in the starlight and candlelight of the first half of our century.

There are few hearts so withered and old but they beat quicker sometimes when they hear, in old-fashioned churches, the wailing, sobbing or exulting strains of "Bradstreet" or "China" or "Coronation," and the mind floats down on the current of these old melodies to that fresh young day of hopes and illusions—of voices that were sweet, no matter how false they sang; of nights that were rosy with dreams, no matter what Fahrenheit said; of girls that blushed without cause, and of lovers who talked for hours about everything but love.—The Blood Seedling, by the late John Hay, in Lippincott's.

In Scandinavia Christmas is celebrated in its literal sense of "peace on earth, good will toward men."

Lead a Man; Don't Drive Him

By Beatrice Fairfax.

NEVER demand attention from a man.

If you do he will immediately find five thousand reasons why he shouldn't give it.

But if he sees that you are not likely to pine away if his attentions cease he will in all probability continue them assiduously.

That's because he likes to imagine that he controls the situation.

So he does to outward seeming, but very often there's "a man behind the gun" in the person of a wise young woman that the world knows not of.

If a man thinks he's having his own way he is quite likely to offer magnanimously to let you have yours.

Then is the time to be tactful and accept the offer in a becoming spirit.

You can't compel a man to be attentive to you against his will, but you can make him think he wants to be attentive to you.

So many girls make the mistake of insisting that a man should be unfailing in his devotion.

They let him see that they expect a great deal from him.

Just because it is expected he loses the desire to give it.

Love will not stand coercion; it must be given spontaneously.

At least that is the case on the man's side.

With a woman it is different.

She likes to have demands made on her love.

You rarely hear of a woman being bored by a man's jealousy.

Do not imagine for one moment that I am advising women to meekly sit down and receive with thankfulness any meagre attentions a man may be inclined to fling to them.

I consider that a woman cheapens herself quite as much when she demands too much as when she is satisfied with too little.

If a man's interest in a woman is on the wane she can never revive it through demands.

She can only revive it through making herself very charming and somewhat inaccessible.

When she demands his attention she irritates him and widens the breach between them.

The woman he loves may lead him by a silken thread, but if she be wise she will never draw the thread taut.

When a man says "must" to a woman she may outwardly rebel, but in nine out of ten cases she inwardly rejoices. Always provided of course that she has some interest in that man.

But no matter how much a man loves a woman he does not relish the word "must" from her lips.

A woman may lead a man, but she never can drive him.—New York Evening Journal.

A New Basis for Labor Unions

By J. Laurence Laughlin.

INSTEAD of the principle of monopoly of competitors, I offer the principle of productivity, as a basis on which the action of unions should be founded.

By productivity is meant the practical ability to add to the product turned out in any industry. The productivity of labor operates on its price just as does utility on the price of any staple article—improve the quality of it and you increase the demand for it. This general truth is nothing new. The purchaser of a horse will pay more for a good horse than for a poor one. A coat made of good material will sell for more than one made of poor material. Why? Because it yields more utility, or satisfaction, to the purchaser. In the same way, if the utility of the labor to the employer is increased, it will be more desired; that is, if the laborer yields more of that for which the employer hires labor, the employer will pay more for it, on purely commercial grounds.

Now it happens that where productivity is low—that is, where men are generally unskilled—the supply is quite beyond the demand for that kind of labor. Productivity being given, supply regulates the price. Obviously, to escape from the thraldom of an oversupply of labor in any given class, or occupation, the laborer must improve his productivity. That is another way of saying that if he trains himself and acquires skill, he moves up into a higher and less crowded class of labor. The effect on wages is twofold: (1) he is now in a group where the supply is relatively less to demand than before; and (2) his utility as a laborer to the employer is greater, and acts to increase the demand for his services. Productivity, therefore, is the one sure method of escape from the depressing effects on wages of an oversupply of labor.—Scribner's.

The Fame of Franklin.

By William MacDonald.

THE entrance of the United States into the polity of nations is an event associated with two names which in their respective ways may stand without apology beside any others in the history of world. No country that has won her independence by the sword can point to a Hero, outside of legend, of whom it is safer to make a boast and a pride than George Washington; for while few of that great kind are so fully known, still fewer can be known so fully without prejudice to their greatness in the world's opinion. Nay, this present writer, being in his small way hazardous and profane, is prompted to opine that if Washington has a fault it is his faultlessness, and that some limitation of the Great Man—some lack in the dynamic element of personality—results in very lovely fashion from the perfection of the Gentleman. In that noble simplicity, that single nobleness, one misses the erring child of sin, and almost confesses to a regret. Be that as it may, however, Washington is a very definite and a very comely figure among the Heroes of the nation; and the recognition accorded him by his countrymen is not beneath his merits, nor smaller than the part which he played in the drama of national deliverance or rebirth. Few will hesitate a moment before conceding that the other great name of the American revolutionary era is that of Benjamin Franklin. Waiving all comparisons between those two, so equal and so different, one may say at least that there is no third name which could replace either of them; none that could break the solitude of Washington were there no Franklin, none that could be set beside Franklin's were there no Washington.—The Atlantic.

The Indispensable Foundations For Durable Satisfactions

By President Eliot, of Harvard.

IT is a very safe protective rule to live today as if you were going to marry a pure woman within a month. That rule you will find a safeguard for life. It is a good rule early to work to learn how to work hard. It is a good rule never to take four minutes to do what you can well accomplish in three minutes, or to take four years to do what you can well accomplish in three years. It is a good rule to live intensely. And it is a good rule to live today and every day like a man of honor.

As an indispensable foundation for solid, durable satisfaction a young man ought first to be a clean, wholesome, vigorous animal. That is the foundation for everything else.

The second thing necessary is a strong mental grip, a wholesome capacity for hard mental work. The great difference between the privilegtd class of educated men to which you belong and the great majority of other people is that the educated class lives by the exercise of mental not physical powers.

The third thing necessary is a spotless reputation. This comes only by living with honor, on honor; by beginning to live so now. There are things an honorable man won't do, can't do. He will never wrong or degrade a woman. He will never oppress or cheat a person weaker or poorer. He is honest, sincere, candid, generous. It isn't enough to be honest. An honorable man must be honest, not with money alone, but in judgments—judgments of women, men, history and the prospects of mankind. Evidence shows that honor comes, not in the favorable judgment or our elders, but of our contemporaries. This judgment is most important.

RUSSIA IN TURMOIL

Petersburg and the Imperial Party in a State of Apprehensive Terror.

WARSHIP TO THE RESCUE

Lights of the Capital Turned Off—Fear of the Populace Growing Stronger Day by Day—Many Thousands Strike—Moscow—Railroad Station Tied Up—Pretender to the Throne, Supported by an Army of 50,000, Marches on the Capital—Money For the Stricken Jews to Be Distributed.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—Steeped in darkness broken only by occasional lights and oil lamps, gripped by a bitter blizzard that makes the streets as desolate as the wildest steppes, trembling in the ominous lull that presages the worst of greater fury in the political storm, this capital at night is as desolate as if anarchy already held full sway. Emperor Nicholas cowers in his palace at Tsarskoe-Selo, in almost continuous conferences with Count Witte and with the Premier's frightened lay figures that form a poor apology for a cabinet.

Even at this hour, with the proclamation restoring the crown lands to the people coming wet from the presses of the Official Messenger, it is apparent that the autocracy that its last trump is blown away. The revolutionists—and that term now means the people—forty days ago heard with derision the Czar's promise is make that gigantic restitution. His surrender of a third of European Russia—all the rich land feloniously held for centuries by the "Little Father" and his hangers-on—now means no more to his impassive people than would the remission of the tax on champagne. Nicholas can withheld bread from his subjects no long to make peace with them by yielding half the loaf.

A new peril confronts the imperial government. As if the republic for which the friends of the people strive constantly, for the establishment of which proclamations flare on the walls of the city and even on the town palaces of the Grand Dukes, were not a sufficient menace, advices from Simbirsk informed the Emperor that in the vast region west of the Volga, wherein Pugatcheff in the second Catherine's bloody reign posed as the Peter III. she assassinated and for a year defied successfully her powerful army, there marches a pretender to the throne with 50,000 fanatical followers.

Peasants Join Pretender.

This claimant of the crown, who usurps the powers of a Pope as well as an Emperor, asserts he, and not Nicholas, should sit on Russia's throne. He has established headquarters close to Penza and is recruiting his brigades from the hundreds of thousands of peasants already inflamed by participation in the agrarian uprisings. It is reported that even Premier Witte betrayed marked perturbation when the last news was received.

Other terrifying news comes from the provinces. The peasants are murdering the high nobility, and massacres of the lesser bureaucrats are of daily occurrence. Dispatches from Kursk told of an attempt to assassinate Prince and Princess Kassatkine Rostkoftsky, both of whom were wounded in a general onslaught by agrarian rioters. It was feared the Princess could not survive her injuries. The Prince's historic castle was leveled with the ground and all the other buildings of importance on his great estate in the Novosol district were burned.

Riots are in progress in Poltava, Samara, Riazan and many other places. Massacres of Jews were begun in Poltava at night. In Moscow 45,000 factory workers struck. Transcaucasia is in the hands of the revolutionists. The Viceroy in Tiflis was compelled to free all persons arrested by administrative order and to restore the Shusha seminary to the Armenian priests from whom it was stolen by the Government two years ago. In Odessa a general strike was proclaimed.

The night's darkness was caused by the Council of Workmen, committees of which in the afternoon compelled all the pharmacists in this city to close their shops and forced the electric light plant to shut down. At 5 o'clock, a few minutes after the city blazed with arc and incandescent lamps, all the thousands of them suddenly went out, leaving St. Petersburg under a pall of terror. That was several hours after the strikers shut off railroad communication with the old capital by closing the station of the Moscow main line. Shortly after the lights went out other committees induced most of the theatre managers to shut their houses.

The Council late at night perfected plans for financing the strike, even going so far as to arrange for a permanent strike fund after the impending revolution, based on contributions of ten per cent. of every workman's wages. All that activity was viewed as making ridiculous the rumors, f

Petersburg and the Imperial Party in a State of Apprehensive Terror.

WARSHIP TO THE RESCUE

Lights of the Capital Turned Off—Fury of the Populace Growing Stronger Hour by Day—Many Thousands Strike in Moscow—Railroad Station Tied Up Pretender to the Throne, Supported by an Army of 50,000, Marches on the City—Money For the Stricken Jews to Be Distributed.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—Steeped in darkness broken only by occasional bonfires and oil lamps, gripped by a bitter blizzard that makes the streets as lonely as the wildest steppes, trembling in the ominous lull that presages the fury of greater fury in the political storm, this capital at night is as desolate as if anarchy already held full sway. Emperor Nicholas cowers in his palace at Tsarskoe-Selo, in almost continuous conferences with Count Witte and with the Premier's frightened lay figures that form a poor apology for a cabinet.

Even at this hour, with the proclamation restoring the crown lands to the people coming wet from the presses of the Official Messenger, it is apparent that autocracy that its last trump is played away. The revolutionists—and the term now means the people—forty years ago heard with derision the czar's promise is make that gigantic restitution. His surrender of a third of European Russia—all the rich land feloniously held for centuries by the "Little Father" and his hangers-on—now means no more to his impassioned people than would the remission of the tax on champagne. Nicholas has withheld bread from his subjects long to make peace with them by yielding half the loaf.

A new peril confronts the imperial government. As if the republic for which the friends of the people strive constantly, for the establishment of which proclamations flare on the walls of the city and even on the town palaces of the Grand Dukes, were not a sufficient menace, advices from Simbirsk informed the Emperor that in the vast region west of the Volga, wherein Pugatcheff in the second Catherine's bloody reign posed as the Peter who had assassinated and for a year defied successfully her powerful army, there marches a pretender to the throne with 50,000 fanatical followers.

Peasants Join Pretender.

This claimant of the crown, who usurps the powers of a Pope as well as an Emperor, asserts he, and not Nicholas, should sit on Russia's throne. He has established headquarters close to Samara and is recruiting his brigades from the hundreds of thousands of peasants already inflamed by participation in the agrarian uprisings. It is reported that even Premier Witte has exhibited marked perturbation when the news was received.

Other terrifying news comes from the provinces. The peasants are murdering the high nobility, and massacres of the lesser bureaucrats are of daily occurrence. Dispatches from Kursk tell of an attempt to assassinate Prince and Princess Kassatkine Rostkoftsky, both of whom were wounded in a general onslaught by agrarian rioters. It is feared the Princess could not survive her injuries. The Prince's historic castle was leveled with the ground and all the other buildings of importance on his great estate in the Novossilsk district were burned.

Riots are in progress in Poltava, Samara, Ufa, Ilnazan and many other places. Massacres of Jews were begun in Poltava at night. In Moscow 45,000 factory workers struck. Transcaucasia is in the hands of the revolutionists. The Viceroy in Tiflis was compelled to free all persons arrested by administrative order and to restore the Shusha seminary to the Armenian priests from whom it was stolen by the Government two years ago. In Odessa a general strike was proclaimed.

The night's darkness was caused by the Council of Workmen, committees of which in the afternoon compelled all the pharmacists in this city to close their shops and forced the electric light plant to shut down. At 5 o'clock, a few minutes after the city blazed with arc and incandescent lamps, all the thousands of them suddenly went out, plunging St. Petersburg under a pall of terror. That was several hours after the strikers shut off railroad communication with the old capital by closing the station of the Moscow main line. Shortly after the lights went out other committees induced most of the theater managers to shut their houses.

The Council late at night perfected a plan of financing the strike, even going so far as to arrange for a permanent strike fund after the impending revolution, based on contributions of 5 per cent. of every workman's wages. All that activity was viewed as making ridiculous the rumors, inspired by bureaucrats, that the general strike was to end. The prophecy was made shortly after midnight by a man high in the confidence of the workmen that before the end of another week the whole empire would be tied up.

Financiers in Frenzy.

Panic broke out on the Bourse over a report that Grand Duke Nicholas Nicholaievitch, commander of the Imperial Guard, was to be military dictator of the empire—had been appointed, in fact. Mr. Vouich, Chief of the Chancellery, denied the report, adding the Government could not determine whether or not to declare martial law in St. Petersburg or elsewhere until it should see how the official proclamation of the crown land restoration was regarded by the people.

Nevertheless, there was a fall of twenty-five points in one kind of Government securities, and the Imperial Fours went lower than they ever had dropped in the course of the war with Japan. A great demonstration was made in the New Theatre in the afternoon by Polish sympathizers and revolutionists. Overflow meetings were held in the furious snowstorm. Polish delegates said their country wanted autonomy, not separation, as it feared Germany. Resolutions demanding that martial law be abolished and autonomy granted to Poland were passed.

Yet with all the terrors piling on end, Nicholas and his Premier are playing false with the people. The Emperor restores the crown lands to them with one hand and with the other signs orders for slaughter of their leaders. Witte, in an appeal to the strikers, addressed them as "brother workmen" and begged them to return to their tasks—to take pity on their wives and children. He explained a Ministry of Trade and Commerce had been appointed to adjust industrial differences, and promised all possible should be done for them. Workmen scoffed at the appeal. Their cynicism was justified by the news in the course of the day that the Government had shot six of the Cronstadt mutineers.

The fact is that Count Witte not only has no Cabinet worth mentioning, but that he no longer has personal influence with the Russian people. From Kursk and other places come appeals from military commandants and police officials for regular troops to aid the now helpless Cossacks. It is believed the soldiers will not move against the people. Already they have refused here and in other cities to take the places of strikers.

Baron Takes Action.

St. Petersburg.—Baron Gunzburg, a well-known Hebrew philanthropist, of St. Petersburg, has received imperial authorization for the distribution of the Hebrew relief funds raised in America, England and other foreign countries. He is now organizing a committee. The advices being received here indicate that much money will be required.

Most horrible accounts of the massacres and destruction of property are reaching St. Petersburg by mail. The inhabitants of the entire town of Chernigoff, practically the whole of the population being Hebrews, were utterly annihilated. Baron Gunzburg's son, who has just arrived here from Kieff, only managed to escape from a mob by hasty flight. When he returned to his residence he found it practically empty. What the rioters had not carried off they had destroyed, including many valuable paintings.

To Guard Americans.

Washington, D. C.—The cruiser Minneapolis, the flagship of Rear-Admiral Chester, and the only vessel of the American Navy in European waters, is going for a cruise in the Baltic Sea, and it was admitted in Government circles that the Minneapolis will make for Cronstadt, where she will be used as a rescue ship for Americans and possibly other foreigners in St. Petersburg if the strike situation should become such that they were forced to flee.

At the State Department it was declared that there is but little possibility that the Minneapolis will be put to such use, but full arrangements have been made for the presence of the vessel as near as possible to the storm centre. The Minneapolis cannot go to Cronstadt without the permission of the Russian Government. At the first sign of danger to Americans, however, the necessary permission will be asked, and there is no doubt that it will be granted forthwith.

ASSUAN DAM NOT A SUCCESS.

Egypt's Cotton Crop Remains Below Maximum Before Dam's Construction.

Washington, D. C.—The reports of the Egyptian cotton crop for 1905, show that it has not reached the maximum attained before the construction of the Assuan Reservoir.

Lord Cromer states that the excess of imported sugar, in 1904-5, over that of the preceding year was 20,000 tons, largely due to the substitution of cotton, requiring less water per acre, for sugar cane.

If it be true that the Assuan Reservoir is a total failure, it is a triumph for the French representative on the technical commission of 1894; but it will cause keen distress to the artistic world, which will have now more reason than ever to denounce the submergence of Philae as useless vandalism,

THOUSANDS IDLE IN JAPAN.

Returning Troops Find Hopeless Industrial Depression.

Tokio, Japan.—It is estimated that 700,000 men are idle since the troops returned from the war. This state of affairs causes uneasiness because of the industrial depression, and there is no immediate prospect of employing them.

HEARST GAINS

Recount to Saturday Adds 408 Votes for Heart

GETTING WARM FOR TAMMANY.

Enough Evidence Has Been Secured to Show That Hearst Is Elected.

New York.—The developments Saturday in the local political situation showed these three important results, namely That William Randolph Hearst had already gained 408 votes in the canvass of six assembly districts in New York county and two districts in Brooklyn; that Tammany Leader Murphy will probably be called before the grand jury in an effort to learn why $5,000 cash was put up by Tammany lawyers to secure Murphy's "floater," Krup's release from prison; and that as the recount of the void and protested ballots proceeded before Justice Giegerich attorneys for William Randolph Hearst gained important legal victories that do much towards piling up a substantial count for the municipal ownership candidate.

The gain of 408 votes for Mr. Hearst was made simply by comparison of the inspector's returns with the original tally sheets, and is independent of the recount of the void and protested ballots which the municipal ownership league thinks will be sufficient to seat its candidate.

The canvass being made with the tally sheets has shown an increase of 408 votes for Hearst, while McClellan has lost 88 votes.

Such glaring discrepancies were found in the returns of nearly all the election districts so far examined by the board of canvassers that counsel for the municipal ownership league will apply to the supreme court to have all the boxes opened and the ballots counted.

Tammany Leader Murphy and Charles P. Dilion, the Tammany lawyer, who secured the release of a fugitive "floater" voter, John Krup, will probably find it hard to answer some of the questions that will be put to them.

Attorney-General Mayer said that if Dilion persists in refusing to answer questions he will endeavor to have him sent to jail for contempt of court.

Dilion, on the stand before the grand jury Friday, declined to answer questions as to the source of the $6,000 cash bail for Krup and the $5,000 cash given to the floater when he "escaped," on the ground that his "professional honor" was involved. He was given a respite, but will be called again before the grand jury.

Brilliant Future of the South.

Knoxville, Tenn.—President Samuel Spencer, of the Southern Railway, accompanied by a large party of railroad officials and eastern business men, were the guests of the manufacturers' and Producers' Association of this city. President Spencer made a short speech and other members of the party made speeches in a happy vein. The closing talk was one made by Hon. James A. Eckles, comptroller of the currency under President Cleveland. He congratulated the south on its future, and remarked that in a few years it would have Pennsylvania's iron and steel industry, and the looms of New England would be moved to the southern states.

Torpedo Boat Sunk.

Kiel.—Torpedo boat "S. 126" collided near Buelk with the small cruiser Undine. The torpedo boat sank, and one officer and thirty-two seamen are missing.

No Hope for the Imprisoned Whalers.

Seattle, Wash.—Capt. Francis Tuttle, formerly in command of the revenue cutter Bear, states that from what he has learned from Captain Bodfish, of the whaler William Bayliss, there is absolutely no chance for the whaling fleet to escape. In his opinion the ships will be crushed in the ice. The crews will have to desert the ships and make for the McKenzie river. The fleet is reported to be sixty miles from Bankisland, which is 500 miles east of the McKenzie. He does not think a relief expedition could aid them in any way.

Prince Charles Elected.

Chistiana, Norway.—The Norwegian parliament on Saturday unanimously elected Prince Charles of Denmark to be king of Norway. There were 116 members present. The result was declared at 5:50 p. m.

As this dispatch was filed the fortress fired a royal salute of forty-two guns in honor of the new king.

TO HOLD 3,000,000 BALES.

Harvie Jordan's Plan to Enable Southern Farmers to Realize.

New Orleans, La.—Following the arrival of President Harvie Jordan, the Southern Cotton Association has perfected plans for the taking off the market of 3,000,000 bales of cotton by means of a series of pledges which the farmers will sign themselves, stating their name and address, and the amount of cotton they will thus hold.

The cotton held will not be sold for less than 15 cents a pound.

A representative of the association is to be sent into every one of the 817 cotton producing counties of the cotton belt at once. When the pledges are signed they will be sent to the central office of the association in Atlanta.

President Jordan says that half of the crop has already been sold at an average price of 10 cents, and the spinners must have all the remainder.

He believes that 15 cents for the remainder is a fair price, and it will only average the spinners 12 1-2 cents, while they have based all their calculations on 14-cent cotton.

PANAMA CANAL

To Be Built on Sea Level—Vote to Abolish Locks.

Washington, D. C.—By a vote of eight to five Saturday the board of construction engineers of the isthmian canal commission, a body which, if President Roosevelt realizes his hopes, embodies the greatest and most representative engineering talent in the world, placed itself upon record as favoring the construction of the Panama canal on the sea level.

This decision represents the outcome of nearly three months' hard work. Early in September the engineers gathered from all parts of the world, for the president, desirous to avail of the best talent as well as to avoid adverse foreign criticism in the future, had called upon governments of the five nations distinguished for the successful construction of great hydraulic works to send each one of their best engineers to assist the American engineers in the decision of the momentous question of constructing the Panama canal at sea level or at a greater altitude involving a system of locks.

The foreigners came to Washington absolutely without instructions from their own governments and without bias, determined to be guided to their decision solely by the facts to be presented to them in the shape of a great mass of physical data and supplemented by several projects, notably that upon which the French Panama company worked so patiently for more than a decade; that of the first American Panama commission, that of M. Buna-Verilla, the French engineer who was in charge of the canal works in the last days of the French administration, and that of London with Bates, the Chicago civil engineer, who was connected with great enterprises on the Nile and elsewhere.

Spy Is Sentenced.

Leipsic, Germany.—The imperial supreme court has sentenced a Polish student, Ladislus Pawloswi, to three years' imprisonment in the penitentiary and six years loss of civil rights for espionage. The accused, whose home is in Warsaw, admitted that he had practiced espionage in behalf of the Russian government. He is quite young, and was arrested in May while making sketches of Fort Waldersee at Posen.

Colored Theatre Planned.

Mobile, Ala.—A colored theatre for Mobile, the only one in the south, will be erected by David Temple Lodge No. 1672, I. O. O. F. The building will cost when fully completed about $40,000. Plans for the building were accepted from George D. Hulburt & Co., architects, of this city, at a meeting held by the building committee of the city council and members of the order at their hall, there being about 120 present, and the vote was unanimous.

Grand Jury Report.

Birmingham, Ala.—The feature of the report of the Jefferson county grand jury, which completed its labors Saturday morning, was the severe arraignment of "flagrant violations" of the anti-pool selling laws at the recent State Fair. The report was submitted to Judge Daniel A. Greene, senior judge of the criminal court, and contains an interesting account of the investigations made.

The report shows that 428 cases had been examined and 246 true bills returned. The grand jury laments the fact that crime is on the increase in the county, and urges all the authorities and the good citizens to see to the enforcement and supremacy of the law.

Anarchists Acquitted.

Barcelona, Spain.—The jury Saturday acquitted the anarchists, Picoret, Miranda, Serra, Torras, Bernadets and Corominas, who were on trial here on the charge of manufacturing bombs for the assassination of rulers.

COSTS MORE TO LIVE NOW

Dun's Review Shows That New Yorkers Pay High Prices.

Expenses Exceed, by Twenty Per Cent., Any Record Ever Made—Burden Heaviest Upon Poor.

New York City.—The cost of living in New York City is higher to-day than it has been since 1880, not counting rents. If rents are considered, living is more expensive than it has ever been, and exceeds by over twenty per cent. any record ever made.

Meats and general groceries are higher than during the panic prices of the Spanish War time. Vegetables of all kinds are too high to be bought by the poorest class of consumers. Rents are ten to twenty-five per cent. higher than a year ago, although the real estate men then thought that high tide had been reached and that suburban extension would lower rents rather than raise them.

These are a few of the facts shown by recent figures compiled by the statistician of the Department of the Interior. Dun's Review gives the same general results boiled down into what it designates as "Dun's Index Figure," which is now 103.853, or nearly forty per cent. higher than a year before the Spanish War, from which all authorities date the period of high prices.

The burden, according to the figures, falls heaviest upon those least able to bear it. The very poor are forced to pay nearly twenty-five per cent. more for their meat, and forty per cent. more for their potatoes than before. Their rent has advanced from twenty to thirty per cent. for apartments in the lower East Side and ten to twenty per cent. in the upper East Side. On the West Side rents have advanced about twenty-five per cent. on moderate-priced tenements, and on those of higher price the advance is smaller. The manager of the largest renting concern in the city said:

"We are powerless to control rentals, and they have steadily gone up. An apartment that could be rented for $35 last year is easily placed now at $45, with slight concessions that make the figure about $42.50. All of our last year $400 apartments are rented this year for $480, while the $1200 to $2500 list shows a uniform advance of ten per cent. The list above $2500 shows slight advances, but nothing like so much. The poorer class of storekeepers have had to pay about thirty per cent. more this year. The poor man gets it in the neck every time, and the rich man is hurt very little."

The manager of one of the largest wholesale and retail grocery houses in the city said:

"Tomatoes have gone up $1 per dozen-gallon cans in the last month, and fruits are so high that packers are using two and one-half pound cans instead of three pound cans, and packing them light in order to keep the quotations down to living figures. The public would not buy if the cans were packed as they were a year ago and sold at proportionate price. We simply have to do it.

"Hams and bacon, the best, are selling at twenty to twenty-four cents, four cents above the price of a short time ago, and even the poorest qualities of hog products are three and four cents higher. All dried meats and fish are higher. Codfish that could be bought from four to six cents per pound is held at six to seven and a half cents and taken readily at the advance.

"Beans that were $1.40 now command $1.85 per bushel. Flour is fifty to eighty cents per barrel higher on wholesale quotations, and that means that Mrs. Jones, who buys a quarter's worth, pays half a cent a pound more. The same thing may be said of all the cereal products in the raw state, and the loaf of bread is lighter now than ever before for the money."

The biggest dealer in dried vegetables, such as potatoes, beets, turnips, cabbage, etc., said:

"Potatoes are way up, $2.25 to $3.50 per barrel, according to quality and place of purchase, with no relief in sight. At this rate the poor woman who buys from the huckster or grocer by the 'small basket' pays about $2 per bushel, and the better class, who buy by the bushel, have to pay $1.50 on the average. Apples are all the way from $2.50 for a poor quality to $8 for extra stock, and some of the fine Western stock brings $6 a small box. The figures are proportionately high on everything, with the possible exception of cabbage, and they are high enough."

NEGROES TURN LYNCHERS.

Atlanta Mob Has White Man Ready to Hang When Police Rescue Him.

Atlanta, Ga.—An alleged attempt to criminally assault Ida Beavers, a six-year-old negro girl, so infuriated the negroes in the Darktown section of Atlanta that J. Z. Justice, a white man, came near being lynched. When a police detail arrived they found Justice in the hands of a mob of 500 negroes and preparations in progress for lynching.

The police rescued Justice, and it was proved that he had no connection with the alleged assault.

London Wants Power Plant.

A bill was introduced in the British Parliament to permit London to obtain a power plant for $40,000,000 to supply the whole city.

Prince Urussoff, ex-Governor of Tver, was appointed Assistant Minister of the Interior to succeed General Trepoff.

Pays for the Advice

"Let's see your tongue," the doctor said,
"You feel run down, I see;
Just sleep eight hours of every day—
Ten dollars is my fee."

"You may be right," the lawyer said,
"But juries disagree;
"You better settle out of court—
A Hundred is my fee."

"Would you be good," the preacher said,
With pious zeal elate.
"Just love your neighbor as yourself"—
And then he passed the plate.

And thus is human nature made,
For in these cases three
Jones gladly paid for good advice
He would have scorned if free.

FINDING HER HEART

BY PAUL BLAKE

(Copyright 1905 by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

He had poured forth his soul in passionate sentences which left him weak and trembling as he waited for her reply.

Her voice was full of sympathy and kindness as she answered him, but it was firm and there was no trace of passion.

"No, Arthur," she said, "it is impossible. I like you very much as a friend and I respect you and admire you, but I do not love you—and I cannot marry you."

The color left his face and the lines drew tight about his mouth.

"You must, Nellie," he exclaimed fiercely. "I love you so much—you were made for me—I—I cannot give you up."

"But I do not love you," she said gently. "And you surely would not want a wife whose heart you did not have."

"Yes I would," he rejoined, "I want you on any terms. I will make you love me. I will find a way. Only marry me, that's all."

"Now be reasonable, Arthur," she urged. "You have so much sense generally that it is most distressing to see you go on in such a ridiculous manner. You will get over this notion of yours in a little while and will find some other girl just suited for you—and I will be a good friend, a sister to you always."

"Oh, Lordy, not that," he broke in making a comical grimace in spite of his distress. "It's too horribly trite and commonplace. Be a niece or an aunt or a grandmother—anything but a sister. It makes me feel like the hero of a short story. The girls to whom they propose always become sisters to them."

She blushed a bit and then smiled. "See," she said, "you are joking about it already. You'll forget all about it in a fortnight."

"No, not in a fortnight," he replied gravely. "Nor in a lifetime."

"Yes, you will," she replied smiling. "You are no judge, yet. Men always think their first love affair very tragic. This is your first affair, is it not? You—you never were in love—that is, thought yourself in love with any other girl, did you?"

He shot a quick, sharp glance at her and the sadness in his face was replaced for an instant by an expression of mixed shrewdness and determination well known to his business associates. But this was only a flash and the sadness returned to his face.

"Yes, there was another," he replied softly, gazing reminiscently into the fire.

She started imperceptibly and looked at him searchingly. His eyes were still on the fire and she bit her lip in vexation at the involuntary feeling she had displayed.

"Was—was it long ago?" she asked in a disinterested tone. "You never spoke of her to me."

"Yes, it was some years ago—before I came here," he replied, "I never spoke of it because it is a closed chapter—a sacred chapter, and I never cared to resurrect it."

His eyes were still soft and dreamy.

"Where was it," she asked as indifferently as possible after some moments of rather awkward silence.

"In Michigan," he replied. "Before I came south."

Still the dreamy eyes fixed on the fire. The girl moved uncomfortably in her chair. She resolved to end the conversation, perceiving her danger, but curiosity or whatnot was too strong.

"Was she tall or short?" she asked.

"Short," he answered with something like enthusiasm. Nellie was tall and willowy. "Short, and, soft and clinging."

The color faded from Nellie's face. She felt unreasonably hurt and angry at the man and the northern girl.

"Was she light or dark?" she asked as though possessed to drink the very dregs.

"Light," he replied with fine enthusiasm, gazing into the coals as though he saw her. "Fair and dainty as Dresden china, with hair like liquid gold and eyes like a summer sky. Her cheeks wore a perpetual flush like a rose and her lips were like the rarest coral." Nellie was dark with flashing black eyes and an olive skin.

"She—she must have been very beautiful," whispered Nellie, her lips quivering.

"She was," he answered, "and as good and true and sweet as she was beautiful."

"You must have loved her very much," faltered Nellie, fascinated by the light, which shone in his eyes as he contemplated the vision in the fireplace.

"I did love her very, very tenderly," he replied.

"Did she love you?" asked Nellie after a long pause.

"Most passionately," he replied, "The parting nearly killed both of us."

"Why did you part?" asked the girl, leaning forward eagerly.

"Her father resolutely opposed the union," he replied slowly. "He was an invalid and she thought it her duty to defer to his wishes and remain with him and care for him. She would not listen to any waiting or my part, but renounced our happiness once and for all."

Nellie had risen and now stood close to Arthur with pale face and frightened eyes.

"Is her father still alive?" she asked.

"No," he replied, "I read of his death only the other day."

"Why do you not go back to her?" she faltered.

"You ought to know," he replied, rising and looking down at her tenderly. "The old love is dead and a new one lives in its place."

The color swept back to her face as she asked hysterically: "Are you sure you love me as much as you did her?"

"More," he exclaimed passionately, as he held out his arms appealingly.

She nestled herself within them and sobbed, hysterically, as she flung her arms about his neck: "I suppose a woman has a right to change her mind."

"Once, but no more," he answered.

And the girl did not dream that the perfidious wretch was saying to himself: "First prize to me as a scientific romancer."

And she never knew that the girl in Michigan was a myth born of the necessities of Arthur's courtship.

"She—she must have been very beautiful," whispered Nellie.

Repaired Wrong Covering.

A man went into a chemist's shop and bought a bottle of some patent stuff, which was advertised thus:

NO MORE COUGHS.
NO MORE COLDS.
1S. 1½D. THE BOTTLE.

Three days later he went to the chemist, complaining that his throat was stopped up and that he could scarcely breathe. "I've drunk all that patent cough mixture," he said.

"Drunk it?" yelled the chemist. "Why, that's an india rubber solution to put on the soles of your boots!"—London Tit-Bits.

NOT ADAPTED FOR THE PART.

Richard Carle's "Find" Turned Out of Little Value.

Shortly before "The Maid and the Mummy" company opened its season, Richard Carle was looking for an actor to play the part of a wild man with the musical comedy. He wanted a big, blustering fellow with a bad man's face and the voice of a steam calliope.

After examining several applicants for the part Mr. Carle finally selected a man who filled all the requirements save that of voice. Orlando Wilson was the giant's name, but like many big fellows he was modest and retiring in manner and speech. In fact, his voice was only a few notes removed from an infant's treble.

"Why don't you shout?" exclaimed Mr. Carle, after listening to a 2x4 voice exuding from a man who stood 6 feet 5 inches in his stockings. "Yell! Give your lungs a chance! Imitate a tipsy cowboy—like this!" To illustrate, Mr. Carle cut loose with a cowboy yell, "Yi-i-i-i-ip!"

"Go home and practice that," he said to the big chap, "and come back to rehearsal to-morrow prepared to make a noise."

Next morning, when the giant put in his appearance, Mr. Carle said, "Well, are you all right?"

"Yes," he replied, "almost perfect; but I'm going to give up my part."

"Why?"

"I live in a flat."

"What has that to do with it?"

"Everything. I started to rehearse that cowboy yell last night, and the neighbors thought I was murdering my mother. I nearly got lynched."

"Why don't you move?"

"Well, my parents have always supplied me with good board and lodging and if I move they might get out of the habit. I don't believe I'm cut out for that part. You'd better engage some other kind of a person."

"I will," said Mr. Carle; "I'll engage a man."

Diving Bell of 200 Years Ago.

It was nearly 200 years ago that Edmund Halley constructed what is often referred to as the first diving bell, although the apparatus must have been much like that which was used in the presence of Charles V.

The principle of the diving bell is simple. An inverted jar sunk in the water retains air at its top, and if there is enough air men may live and breathe and work there, and keep dry.

Dr. Halley's diving bell was a large wooden chamber, open at the bottom and loaded there with lead to prevent it from turning in the water. Pieces of glass set in the roof furnished light. Air was supplied by an ingenious method; for leaded casks full of air were sent down, bung downward. Tipping the barrel, water would rush into it and drive out the air to the man in the bell chamber.

At the depth of thirty-three feet the air is compressed to half its former bulk, and the bell is therefore at the depth filled full with water; and as the depth increases, so do the compression and the pressure.—Technical World Magazine.

"Still Sweeter Sings My Darling."

The bell-bird fills Australian shades
With songs like bubbling fountains;
The redstart thrills the river glades
Beneath Virginian mountains.

The oriole, that soul afire,
Paurs forth a storm of singing
To the rapt mate of his desire,
In soft gray hammock swinging.

By night, by day, on topmost spray,
Or where the covert hushes,
Plays Nature's weirdest orchestra—
The mock bird, king of thrushes.

But all the words of all the birds—
Ay, e'en the songs, magician—
All sweetest notes from singing throats,
Fade, as at dawn a vision.

When, be it catch or lullaby,
Or songs of battle ringing,
Love lays or hymns of liberty,
I hear my darling singing.

For song each bird hath times preferred—
When winter winds are gnarling
Each tender tree the chickadee
Outsings the housed starling.

But whether blows the summer's rose,
Or winter's winds be snarling,
Be spring abloom, or fall in gloom
Still sweeter sings my darling.

—Henry Austin in Century.

The Age of Slang.

"The way you New Yorkers address one another is still strange to me, although I have been coming here for years," said a visiting New Englander. "One would judge that you had no Christian names. I seldom hear one used, except formally. It's 'old man,' or 'old fellow,' and even in speaking to your wives it's 'little one,' 'little woman,' or some other silly diminutive. The women don't seem to be much better, with such terms as 'boy,' and 'hubby.' The children are likewise misnamed and seem to understand only such appellations as 'kid' and 'little rascal.' My daughter came here with the good old New England name of Priscilla, but I hear her called 'Prissy,' and some even make it 'Cilly.' This is certainly an age of slang."—New York Sun.

Good Reason.

Representative Adamson, of Georgia, says that when he was judge of his county court a fellow was before him charged with having stolen a pair of pantaloons—they call them "britches" in Georgia. There were several witnesses, but the evidence was rather meagre, and the accused was acquitted. He was told that he could go, but he remained in his seat. His lawyer, to whose successful defense he owed his liberty, hinted to him that he was free to depart, but he didn't budge.

"I don't want to go," said the fellow.

"And why not?" asked the lawyer.

"Let the witnesses go first."

"Why?"

"Why, sir, I've got on the 'britches' I stole."

WILL LIVE IN HISTORY'S PAGES.

Famous Highway to the Southwest Built Only a Century Ago.

A hundred years ago the eyes of America were on the southwest. We were on the edge of the war with Spain over the closing of the Mississippi, and under orders from Washington, Wilkinson, in command of Fort Adams, held solemn conclave with the Indians who owned the east bank of the big river, and by treaty established a sacred postroad through their country.

It left Nashville on the old Buffalo trace, crossed the Tennessee at Colbert's ferry below the Mussel shoals, and, striking the hills back of the Big Black, came down to Natchez and on to New Orleans, with a branch to the Walnut hills. The road was more than a military necessity, for so many pirates infested the Mississippi that merchants returning from New Orleans needed a safer route home with their money.

After it was opened it became all things to the southwest. Methodism went down that way in the person of Tobias Gibson; later Lorenzo Dow followed him with the camp meeting spirit. Old Hickory marched his army down to Natchez over this route in 1813 and marched it back again next spring. And from that day till nearly our own it has been the great center of that country's activity. Now the railroads have come, the settlers have moved down into the valleys and opened up poorer roads in the beds of branches and through swampy lowlands. But the Trace is still there upon its ridges, the best road of them all.—Everybody's Magazine.

Claims Cure for Appendicitis.

Dr. Pond of Liverpool, England, has advanced a new theory with deference to the origin of appendicitis and other disturbances of the digestive organs. He calls attention to the fact that such ailments can often be attributed to antimonial poisoning, and the source of the antimony taken up by man is said to be the rubber rings which are frequently used to close all sorts of bottles.

Dr. Pond has established the fact that such rings consist of almost one-third their weight of antimony. The antimony is not only dissolved by the mineral waters containing alkalis and organic acids, but these rubber rings, as daily observation shows, soon become brittle and some of the compound falls into the contents of the vessels.

Dr. Pond claims to have found that a frequently repeated introduction of antimony can become the source of a series of disturbances of the nutritive and digestive system, especially through continued weakening of the muscles of the stomach and intestines.

Nothing Wrong.

There is nothing at all the matter, my boy,
The world goes plugging along
In the same old way from day to day,
Singing her good old song.
Maybe her songs grow old to you,
And maybe your hopes grow dim;
But there's nothing at all the matter, my boy—
It's only your foolish whim.

There is nothing at all the matter, my boy—
You have only lost your hold;
Get back to the life and back to the strife,
Get back to your work's enfold.
There is work laid out for your hands to do,
So stick to your task with vim;
There is nothing at all the matter, my boy—
It's only your foolish whim.

There is nothing at all the matter, my boy—
Stand by till your task is done;
It's the way for a place in the world's mad race—
It's the way that the end is won.
There's a place at the top, but the way is long,
Don't rail if your star grows dim;
Don't say that the world's all wrong, my boy—
It's only your foolish whim.
—W. F. Griffin in Milwaukee Sentinel.

His First Visit.

"Look here, Halton, why in creation did you lure me into buying a ticket for that lawn fete?"

"Why, did you pay out much?"

"Much Why, they charged me 50 cents for lemonade and $1 for ice cream."

"That was exorbitant."

"Then I was lured through the 'maze of mystery,' 'witches' caldron,' etc., and by the time they finished telling my fortune I didn't have a penny."

"That was tough."

"O, I could have recovered from that, but it was the sequel. When I reached home dead broke my wife accused me of playing poker and hasn't spoken to me since."—Chicago News.

Careful of Strangers.

"They're very careful at the Boston beaches," said a man who visited the New England metropolis a few weeks ago. "I went down to one of the watering places one hot day. There had been a storm and the surf was rough, and the man in charge refused to let me go in bathing. I left in no very pleasant frame of mind, and complained to the cabman as I drove away.

"Oh, well," said he, in a consoling tone, "you see they don't like to have strangers come down here and get drowned. It hurts the beach."

Girl Writes Verse.

Violet Firth, a thirteen-year-old English girl, has written a volume of verse which has sold more than 3,000 copies.

Fisherman in Rain of Mountain Tr

Waterspout Drew Fish from Their Native Element and Sent Them Back to Earth Before Astonished Sportsman.

About nineteen years ago, before the hills hereabouts became the summer resorts for the state's elite, and rustic cottagers were scarce on the mountain sides, I rode over from Golden to Wellington lake on a burro, more to acquaint myself with the country and, of course, incidentally to shoot any game I chanced to spy, says a writer in the Denver Post. From a distance I caught sight of the lake glistening in the sunlight like a big patch of snow, and the closer I got the more decided I became to pitch my tent on its green carpeted banks for a few days' recreation. There were trout, two and six pounders, in the lake in those days, and I caught lots of them. One afternoon dark clouds began hovering around the mountain tops, and by dusk the wind had gained in velocity and great whitecaps appeared on the lake, to be transformed into clouds of mist which sprayed the mountain sides like an April shower. Off in the distance I heard a peculiar wind sweeping over the mountains and shortly the pine trees on the opposite side of the lake began swaying heavily, as if they would break, and broken boughs filled the air like the wreckage of a cyclone. Hardly the trees ceased their when I gazed in wonder at the spout forming in the middle of lake. It was a splendid spectacle it gradually grew in height, shape, and in diameter appeared be twenty feet at its base. Like monument it rose on the surface the water, when there came a distant weird sound, and in the ness of the trees' agitation I lost of the waterspout, but soon loomed up nearer to shore, and it collapsed there was a rain of trout, gentlemen, I say genuine rado mountain trout, and they scattered on the ground for distance around me, but hardly weighed over three ounces.

How do I account for it? We figured it out this way—the spout happened to form over a school of fish near the shore the water was quite shallow and suction of the whirlwind was so it raised the fish that were in only a few inches deep. Rather see the fish perish on land I myself for an hour throwing back into the lake, but in many was extinct, having fallen on rocks from a height of probably feet.

Truth About "Friend of Your Youth"

Not Always as Welcome as the Verses of Poets Have Depicted — Knows Too Much About the "Salad Days."

It's a subject that's dear to the makers of verse,
In mellifluous measure they love to rehearse
The tender affection, unchanging as truth,
Of the tie that unites us to friends of our youth.

Now, I find the friend of my youth oft a bore,
Whose very existence I've cause to deplore,
A rem'niscent ruffian of unerring mind,
Who rakes up the past that I wish left behind.

If you are not as young as you'd have folk believe
He'll expose all your guileless attempts to deceive;
On the slightest excuse he stands ready to state
That you were at college in seventy-eight.

When wooing a maiden you hope you will win
This friend of your youth is quite sure to butt in,
With irrelevant anecdotes fitted to show
You a heartless Lothario ages ago.

He never allows you a chance to forget
That you did foolish things that to you regret.
But leaves the impression you're still young ass
You were when belonging to So-and- class.

You wish to appear a man sober, To pose as a pillar of Church and State;
But vain are your hopes while this scented sleuth
Drags into the light indiscretions youth.

If you show him the door or cut him sure
That the world that knows little of you endure
Will dub you a heartless hyena, in A monster who turns down the friend his youth.

Oh, no; it is vain that you hope to He's always at hand with reminiscence rude;
And when you are dust he'll publish book
On "The Real Mr. Blank," where goose he will cook.

Nay, I'm sure if I'm called to realms in the sky
Some friend of my youth I shall find ering nigh,
Rem'niscent as ever and quick to quaint
The angels they needn't take me saint.

One Strawberry—One Franc—One T

American Diner in Paris Restaurant Remembered the Waiter in Leaving Portion of Fine Fruit as Guerdon.

Roland Morrill of Benton Harbor, Mich., has a peach orchard of 5,000 acres in Texas. This is probably the largest peach orchard in the world.

"When I went to Texas," Mr. Morrill said recently, "they raised only cotton there. But I soon found that peaches as fine as California's could be grown in Texas, where they would ripen nearly a month ahead of all others, and accordingly I went in for Texas peach-growing, and my fruit fetches the highest price on the market. So rare are peaches when mine appear that they command a rate almost as high as fruit brings in Paris. The best and also the costliest fruit in the world is to be found in the Parisian restaurants. I know a man who lunched at the Cafe de la Prix one fall day and noticed with surprise some superb strawberries on a sideboard.

"'How much are your strawberr he asked the waiter.

"'A franc, monsieur,' the waiter swered.

"And accordingly the man ord some, and a dish of berries, each big as a crabapple, was set before He enjoyed the splendid fruit. when his bill was brought he fo that he was charged 10 francs— for the berries.

"'Waiter, how is this?' he said am charged 10 francs for these st berries, whereas you told me were only a franc.'

"'A franc apiece, monsieur,' waiter said gently.

"Though this man had been he paid. But he gave the waiter tip. As he was walking out the said reproachfully: 'Sir, have forgotten me?'

"'Forgotten you?' the Amer said. 'Certainly not. I've left strawberry on that plate there, is equal to a tip of 1 franc.'"—Ch Chronicle.

Good Reasons for Keeping Boys Bu

Old Adage About Idle Hands as True To-Day as When First Uttered — Statistics That Are Worth Pondering.

That "Satan finds some mischief still for idle hands to do" is as true to-day as in the days when men could see, or thought they could see, the horned head looking over their shoulders. It is now claimed that there is satisfactory proof, derived from prison statistics, that busy hands keep boys from starting in lives of crime.

A writer in the North American Review asserts that manual training is almost as good a preventive of crime as vaccination is of smallpox. It is said that the warden of a penitentiary was asked:

"What per cent of the prisoners under your care have received any manual training beyond some acquaintance with farming?"

"Not 1 per cent," replied the warden.

"Have you no mechanics in on?"

"Only one mechanic—that is, man who claims to be a house ter."

"Never had a shoemaker."

"Have you any tailors?"

"Any printers?"

Nothing is more easily spoiled by careless washing than a blanket. It should be plunged into a lather of boiled soap and warm water, with one tablespoonful of ammonia allowed to each pail and a half of water, washed through three lathers, and rinsed in warm water thoroughly. Put through a wringer and hang out to dry as quickly as possible; a windy day is the best for these heavy articles.

FINE CARPETS.

A good authority on Wilton and Axminster carpets tells us that they should never be swept with a straw broom. The corners and edges should be cleaned with a stiff hairbrush and the rest of the floor gone over with a good carpet sweeper. Oriental rugs should never be beaten on the line, but should be swept in the direction of the nap. If very dirty they ought to be laid, face downward, on the porch or grass, beaten with a rattan beater as they lie, and then turned and swept on the right side.

MODERN DUSTING.

The up-to-date housewife, with all her knowledge of unwholesome atoms and germs, no longer uses a feather duster. She has at last begun to realize that the only way to dust a room properly is with a soft cheese cloth rag neatly hemmed and kept especially for the purpose. Whenever necessary she puts it through the wash as she does other household cloths and towels. It is sometimes difficult, however, to dust out with these cloth dusters, narrow corners, behind radiators, bookcases that are built into the wall and other contrivances. With a long handled feather duster housewives can reach into such places. One ingenious woman has hit upon the idea of buying an ordinary dish mop especially for this purpose. The fine strings in the mop if dampened very slightly, hold the dust where a fluffy feather duster would only scatter it.

RECIPES.

Fruit Tapioca—Wash a cup of the fine granulated tapioca in cold water, rinsing several times. Place in a bowl with three cups of cold water and allow this to stand for thirty minutes. Then cook in a double boiler until the tapioca is clear and transparent. In the meantime pare and core half a dozen apples and place them in a deep baking dish. When the tapioca is clear pour it over the apples. Cover the dish tightly and bake in a moderate oven until the apples are tender. This should take from thirty to forty minutes. Remove the lid and brown the surface slightly. Serve cold with whipped cream or hot with foamy sauce. Peaches may be substituted for the green apples, and will take less time to cook. They should be pared, cut in half and the stones removed. When whipped cream is served with the peaches pulverized sugar should be passed with them.

Steamer Fruit Pudding—Cover the bottom of a butter mold with dices of bread lightly buttered. Over this place a layer of stewed apples or peaches, then another layer of bread and butter, alternating with the fruit until the mold is three-quarters full. Pour over this a custard composed of two eggs, one-half a cup of sugar and a pint of milk. Fasten the cover of the mold tight, drop into boiling water and steam one hour. Serve with foamy sauce or sweetened cream.

Mixed Fruit Pudding—Peel and core enough tart apples to fill a deep baking pan. Fit them in snugly and fill in the holes left by the cores with seedless raisins and bits of shredded citron and lemon peel. Dust them with sugar. Pour over them half a cupful of water and bake in a slow oven until perfectly tender. Remove them from the oven, sprinkle lightly with bread crumbs, dust with sugar and bake ten minutes longer. Serve with the following sauce: Beat together in a stewpan one tablespoonful of flour and one-half cupful of sugar. Pour over this a cup of boiling water and bring to a boil. Remove from the fire and pour this slowly over one egg well beaten. Flavor with a dash of lemon. Pour over the baked fruit and serve immediately.

Apple Custards—Pare and core medium-sized apples and steam them until they are tender, then press through a colander. For the custard, allow for each apple one tablespoonful of syrup, one-quarter of a pint of milk and one egg and one-half teaspoonful of butter. While the apple is hot add the butter, the yolks of the egg, the sugar and the milk, beaten to a custard. Pour this mixture into buttered baking cups and bake in a pan of hot water for twenty minutes. Have ready the beaten whites of the eggs, sweetened. Heap these on top of the custards, dust with powdered sugar and brown for a moment in a hot oven. Serve cold from the cups.

THE PULPIT.

A SCHOLARLY SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. HOWARD MELISH.

Subject: The Gospel of Love.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—When St. Luke's Church celebrated this year the festival of its patron saint, the Rev. Howard Melish, of the Church of the Holy Trinity, preached an instructive sermon. Mr. Melish's subject was "The Gospel of Love," and the text, St. John xv:12: "This is My commandment, That ye love one another, as I have loved you." Mr. Melish said:

What impressed the world, when Christianity was first preached, was Christian love. The world had known patriotism, family affection, clan loyalty. But interest in and sacrifices for men outside your family clan, country, were new. The outpouring of money to relieve the distress of Galveston, Martinique, Armenia, is indicative, we say, of our common brotherhood to-day. Think of the effect on a world which had never experienced such deeds of the sacrifices Christian people of Macedonia and Achaia made to send help to the "poor saints of Jerusalem," at a time, too, when for years the Jew was the most detested of all Mediterranean peoples. The heathen poet Lucian, in his comments on the new religion was especially struck by this. "Their original law giver," he wrote, "had taught them that they were all brethern, one another. * * * They become incredibly alert when disaster occurs that affects their common interests. On such occasions no expense is grudged." And one of the ablest of the early Christian apologists, Tertullian, observes: "It is our care for the helpless, our practice of loving kindness, that brands us in the eyes of many of our opponents."

Professor Harnack has a most interesting chapter on the gospel of love and charity in his new book, "The Expansion of Christianity." He shows that during all those years of expansion the Christian people were busy with the support of widows and orphans, the sick, the infirm, and the disabled, the care of prisoners and people languishing in the mines, the care of poor people needing burial, the care of slaves, of those visited by great calamities, of brethren on a journey, and of churches in poverty or any peril. The churches also furnished work and insisted on work. It was such love that called forth from the heathen world the exclamation of surprise and deep interest, "Behold how these Christians love one another."

The Christian church, as at present organized, no longer impresses the world in this way. Once the church maintained the hospitals and asylums; to-day the State is the great charitable agency, as it is the great educator. Compared with Brooklyn's public schools and charities our Church Charity Foundation and schools at Garden City are mere playthings. The labor unions, not the churches, support their brethren who are thrown out of work. Not only do they contribute heavily to their fellows during strikes, but by means of sick benefits and death payments they maintain their members during sickness, give them decent burial and care for the widows and orphans. The Roman Catholic church still maintains parochial schools, sodalities, asylums, hospitals in a great and useful way, because it has the support of members and concentrates its resources. The Protestant church, though it outnumbers the Catholic church, is divided into eight principal camps. Each is too weak to make much of an impress upon the world, and, so far, they have not learned how to unite in a common service. Members of Protestant churches are leaders in every educational and charitable cause, but they count there as individuals and only in the most indirect way as church people. The Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations are the only great union movements in which the Protestant churches have taken active part. But have those impressed the community as an expression of the love of the Christian church? It is the opinion of some workers in the Young Men's Christian Association, and of many clergymen, that the association has become another church. It does a splendid work for young men, and every cent given to it is well spent, but it does not make the Christian church stronger except as all philanthropic work outside the church plows the field and makes it ready for the sowing. Since it was started there are no more young men in the churches than before. On the contrary, from every church, Protestant and Catholic, comes the common cry that the men are leaving the churches for the associations, for lodges, for the clubs, for the labor unions. The churches, among the working classes and the so-called upper classes, are attended and supported largely by women. With the extension of the trade union movement among working women, and clubs among other women, the future alone can tell what the falling off here may be. There are now over a million people in New York City alone outside the churches, while Protestantism has in the last year actually shrunk in numbers. It is easy to see why thousands should be out. All grafters, all dishonest insurance officials, all gamblers, "all lovers of pleasure, more than lovers of God," all indifferent people, and a hundred classes more, naturally stay away from a place where every word and look and sign disturbs the conscience if it is not dead, and bids men live for others. I wish all these were in the church as I wish all the sick were in the hospitals and the shipwrecked safe on land. But when we have subtracted from one million the thousands who can have nothing in common with the Christian church there remain the many thousands who may and ought to be within the church.

They are outside the church, but they are interested in the Christian religion. I have been deeply impressed this summer with the desire and eagerness of men to hear the Gospel. When two or three hundred men, working at the navy yard, will stand in the sun at noon during the hottest days of July to hear a man speak about the joy and peace and strength of a religious faith, when you can speak on the corner to as many men as can hear you above the roar of the streets, when a vast crowd, mostly men, will attentively listen to religion for nearly an hour on the sands at Coney Island there is proof that religion is not dead. The Christian religion is not dead, but men are not going to the churches for it. Put it in books, and men will read it; preach it in theatres, and a crowd will flock in; practice it in a social settlement, a labor union, a hospital, asylums, and waiting lists are needed.

What is the matter with the Christian church that it does not impress the world as it once did? Labor leaders will tell you that it is a class affair and belongs to the employers. Socialists answer that it is the bulwark of the modern capitalistic organization of society with which they are at war. Scientific men reply that it has no love of truth for truth's sake. While the great mass of men outside will tell you that they are not interested. This hour and a half each week of hymns and prayer and sermon does not seem to them to be a vital thing. To hear some speaker who can touch the heart or head they will come, but not for the church as church.

If the church is a class organization its love is not Christian, for Christ's love knows no distinctions. If the church, as socialists claim, is merely poulticing wooden legs in its charity, then it has no love of fundamental Christian brotherhood. If the love of truth is wanting its love of God is a sham. What the church needs, if there is much or little in this criticism, is not multiplication of its philanthropies, nor concentration of them into a few that would compete with the state and stamp their character more firmly on the world, but a filling of the church itself, of you and me who do spend this hour here on Sunday and have assumed membership in the church with the love of Christ.

Let me try to tell you what that love is. A man once went to Christ with the question, who is my neighbor? But the Master gave no answer. He was not interested in knowing or showing who our neighbors are. What He showed that man was how he might become a neighbor. He told that man the story of the good Samaritan and said to him and to us "Go thou and do likewise. Do not stand there asking who is thy neighbors. Be on the lookout for some one to whom thou canst show mercy and goodness and so become a neighbor." You can put no man outside the field of your mercy. Even though a man may hate you, and be your enemy, Jesus says the great duty for you is to seek him and do him good. If he rejects you and will have none of your mercy and goodness, your efforts should not end. You can at least pray for those who despitefully use you and persecute you.

A member of a certain parish once told me that while he wanted the church to reach the poor, he did not want the poor to attend the same service that he attended or sit in the same service that he attended or sit in the same seat because they were too odoriferous. I suppose this person stands in his modern temple and exclaims: "God, I thank Thee that I am not as other men are—unlaundered and unwashed, even as that poor man yonder. I bathe every morning, I wear two collars a day and use patent preparations for my teeth and face." Such cleanliness is as near godliness as the Pharisee in the Master's story of the publican was near the kingdom of God. Suppose that man is unwashed and his presence is disagreeable, the thing for you to consider is not what he is, but how you may become neighbors to him. Introduce yourself. Become his friend. Show him the example of cleanliness and godliness, and the time will come when you can make him clean and Godlike.

On the night before He died He laid aside His robes and washed the apostles' feet, to show men that the greatest is he who serves the most, and that no service, however menial, is too low for even divinity. Whom do you and I love to honor? The man who serves or the man who rules? Whom do we imitate? Those who lead in business and society or those who serve? Until the men and women in our churches honor the Christ as He who serveth, not by singing hymns and saying creeds, but giving and doing likewise, the church may give money generously and employ costly choirs and pulpit orators, but it will not impress the world.

And then for those without there must be goodness of heart. That the Christian church is undergoing the severest fire of criticism since the early days is manifest to anyone who reads. Much of the criticism is just but much of it is unfair and one-sided. Some requires that the church should listen patiently and acknowledge what is just, and to those who hate her should she return good for evil, blessing for cursing, beneficence and intercession for persecution. No heart that is susceptible to the divine can long withstand the love that seeketh not her own.

A picture has been on exhibition in England and has strongly appealed to the imagination of men. It is entitled, "Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by?" Christ stands on a pedestal before St. Paul's, as he stood before Pilate's palace, with hands tied over head crowned with thorns. While the crowd that passes by, absorbed in its work or pleasure, is you, workingman, lawyer, doctor, men of affairs, you women of society, working women and boys, and I, priest of His church, with never a glance to Him who died because He loved, or to the poor mother and her child who have taken refuge from us at His feet. While the motto on the pedestal before His cathedral, His people, His city is, to the unknown God. Oh, men and women, is that picture true of you?

Goodness and Mercy Follow Us.

Some people can see providence in their past lives, and hope for them is their future lives, but never trust entirely in their being there in the present. Yet God is as truly working out His plans for His children in each hour to-day as at any time in their lives. Goodness and mercy follow us all the days of our lives if they follow us at all. The present trial, the present drudgery, are put there to work out good for us, and more than good—grace and glory, too.—J. R. Miller.

Value of Surrender.

Only in proportion as our own will is surrendered, are we able to discern the splendors of God's will.—Presbyterian.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR NOVEMBER 26.

Subject: Abstinence For the Sake of Others, I. Cor. x., 23-33—Golden Text, I. Cor. x., 13—Memory Verses, 31-33—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

In verses 14-22 Paul resumes the discussion from chapter 8:13 touching the eating of meats which had been offered in sacrifice to idols. In the lesson before us we have some practical directions on this subject.

I. The duty of living for others (vs. 23, 24).

23. "All things are lawful." I may lawfully eat all kinds of food, but all are not expedient. It would not be becoming in me to eat of all, because I should by this offend and grieve many weak minds. Though it may be admitted that it is strictly lawful to eat meats offered to idols, yet there are strong reasons why it is inexpedient, and those reasons ought to have the binding force of law. "Not expedient." And so, being unprofitable and injurious, may thereby become unlawful. "Edify not." All things do not tend to build up the cause of Christ, and therefore are not expedient. 24. "His own." Let no man consult his own happiness, pleasure or convenience, but let him ask what will be for the good of others. No rule is laid down about eating or not eating any kind of food as a matter of importance in itself. With such things the gospel has no concern. What Paul does prescribe relates to the effect of our conduct upon others. Let every man live not for himself, but for every part of the great human family with which he is surrounded. "Another's wealth." "But each his neighbor's good."—R. V. This will cause true happiness.

II. The duty of guarding the weak (vs. 25-30). 25. "Is sold." The meats of idol sacrifices were often exposed to sale in the markets especially by the priests, when they had on hand a surplus. To the Christian this was as lawful as any other meat. "Shambles." The meat stalls in the market. "Asking no question." The Jews were vexed with innumerable scruples with respect to their eating and were accustomed to ask many questions about their food, as to where it was obtained, how prepared, etc.; all of these scruples and questionings the gospel abolished. 26. "Earth is the Lord's." See Psa. 24:1. This meat belongs to the Lord and is made for man's use. It does not belong to the idol, even though it has been offered to it. It may therefore be partaken of as God's gift. 27. "Bid—feast." This refers to a feast in a private house. In verses 14-22 the apostle severely rebukes the practice of eating at feasts in heathen temples, because this was one part of idolatrous worship. If a pagan friend invite a Christian to his home to dine he should eat what is set before him without vexing his host with questions about his food. But there is nothing here commanded which would require a person to eat or drink that which is harmful.

28. "Say unto you." That is, if one of your fellow guests should display scruples of conscience, or a heathen should be likely to draw the inference that you approved of idol worship, this altogether alters the case. You are no longer simply eating with thankfulness the food set before you as the gift of God, but the question of idolatrous worship of idols as permissible to a Christian. 29. "For why," etc. This verse and the next as a little obscure. The meaning seems to be that "no man has a right to interfere with the liberty enjoyed by another, save so far as his own conscience and conscientious convictions are likely to be affected thereby." We must guard the point of yielding to another's conscience, for we may by obeying a man's false conscience confirm his self-conceit, or establish a false morality. 30. "If I by grace." "If I partake with thankfulness."—R. V.

III. The correct rule of conduct (vs. 31-33).

31. "Eat, or drink." The glory of God is to be the end of all our actions. In themselves eating and drinking are things indifferent, but there are circumstances in which they may be matters of the highest importance. In our own day, for instance, the question or using or abstaining from intoxicating liquors is one which ought to be dealt with on the same principles which Paul has laid down in this chapter. Such a question should be decided on one ground alone, namely, whether by using them or abstaining from them we shall best promote the glory of God. "Do all." This requires that we should plan and order our whole life in accordance with God's law. "Glory of God." To live to God's glory should be the high aim of every individual. This is a sufficient rule to regulate every man's conscience and practice.

32. "Give none offense." See R. V. Though you may be no better or worse for eating meat or not eating, yet if your conduct injures others and leads them into sin you should abstain entirely. It is far more important that your brother should not be led into sin than that you should partake of meat which you acknowledge is in itself of no importance. This is a general principle which should regulate Christian conduct at all time. "Jews." The apostle ever avoided offense to his kinsmen after the flesh. "Gentiles." Crossing none of their prejudices where God's law does not require it.

33. "Please all men." He did this so far as he could righteously. "May be saved." His main object was to seek the salvation of all men. This was the end in view. Salvation enables men to set aside their own ways in order to uplift another. Strife over non-essentials destroys rather than builds up the work of God.

COMMITTEE.

CLANTON.

Well, Mr. Editor, we cotton growers must stand to the rack, fodder or no fodder; I'll hold my cotton until the hoops fall off before I'll take less than 11 cents (I see President Jordan says we ought to get 15 cents, so, stand steady in the boat and victory is ours. I don't see but one thing that could put it down, and that would be to elect democrats next fall or any other time. But it looks awful gloomy for the demmies in the future. I do believe we'll all be rich before another democratic administration. Why it would scare the majority of the democrats about to death to even think of their crowd getting in. But, wasn't the mayoralty election in New York a surprise, and don't it look hard to see Hearst counted out after he'd made such a run? I don't see how any one can blame the democrats for counting any one out or stuffing the ballot boxes, for I believe it is just natural for them to steal in an election. Look at New York and at Ohio. In Ohio under republican rule not an intimation of fraud, though a democratic governor was elected where Roosevelt carried the state by nearly a quarter of a million majority, and although the republicans had the election machinery and had passed the law under which the election was held, yet when a democrat got the most votes they let him have the office. In New York the democrats had control of the election machinery and look what frauds were committed. Ballot boxes found floating in the river, and other returns in baby carriages. These were from the election precincts in which Hearst had the big vote. Every democratic voter that is inclined to be honest should read up on this contest which Hearst is making for a recount. One of the Tammany democratic heelers was arrested and then let out on $5,000 bail, but he jumped his bond and didn't show up when his trial was called, but then you know Tammany has lots of money that they've stole from the people and they will spend a heap before they'll let their fraud be known. You just watch New York city in the next election and see the republicans carry it, for those people in New York aren't like they are here. They won't stand for a steal. It's amusing to read the papers in Alabama and hear them plead for a fair show in New York, but just get some of their back numbers and see how they pleaded? when Kolb was elected Governor; or when Reynolds was elected senator and was counted out by the grossest fraud. But they get awful honest when the frauds are 1,000 miles away. And just go back one year to Thorsby in our own county, when the democratic club was in full bloom (and had odor) and look at what was tried up there the night of the election, one democrat mayor got sick and the other wouldn't sign the returns. I tell you it would be mighty interesting reading to our people to see all the telegrams and telephone messages that passed, and know all about the instructions and who gave them. But I mustn't tell too much yet, I'll let it all out some day in the near future. When the democrats make an election law, they fix it so they can stay in regardless of how the votes were cast. How fitting for McClellan to get Parker, the democratic candidate "that also ran" last fall, to defend him in his attempt to defraud Hearst of the office. I do hope we will get honest enough down here some day to send a ballot box thief to the penitentiary; may the Lord send the time soon. And then those few democrats that admit that they would like to see things reformed, but they want to do all the reforming in the party, they haven't got the backbone to turn and vote for a republican, as a rebuke to a rotten machine. Look at the thousands and thousands of republicans in Ohio and Pennsylvania that voted for a democratic candidate as a rebuke to the republican "bosses" who had got corrupt. And then look on the other side even Folk, of Missouri, that "eminent democratic reformer," he went to Ohio and Pennsylvania and spoke against the "bosses in power" because they were republicans, but he "didn't have time" to go to New York and help Jerome in his fight against the "boss" because that "boss" was a democrat. Well, what do you think Attorney J. Ormond Middleton says very emphatically that "no more democracy for him, he is a republican straight and will be found in the ranks of the people hereafter." Don't you know, that when Mr. Middleton gets on the stump next year he'll just paralize the opposition, for he is Chilton's peerless orator, and with the solid facts of Republican progress and prosperity to stand on, he'll just wake our county up.

MAPLESVILLE.

The stockholders of the Twin Tree Lumber Co. have met, and it is said found everything in a prosperous condition. It seems as if everybody in this part of our county is preparing to go to court, so Clanton will be on a boom for the next two weeks. Very little cotton is coming in at present. Lee Hayes is a frequent visitor to our town, as he and 'Squire Garner have considerable legal business together. David Vines will be the R. F. D. carrier on route one from here. The Sims Lumber Co. are building a nice mill near Shoults. Rev. Mr. Davis is holding a protracted meeting, but it seems as if people were too busy to go to church. Mrs. Davison, of Jacksonville, Fla., is here visiting her son, F. L. Davison. Miss Powers, of Jackson, Ala., is here visiting her sister, Mrs. Gilbert. Mrs. Saunders has returned from a visit to her daughter in Atlanta. Joe and Clint Raspberry are clerking in this town for the winter. The sales going on here are attracting much attention, though the long distance is getting popular way of getting prices. Many have went from here recently to Selma to attend the "big show." Henry Johnson was in town last week, winding up his home affairs. Shingles are at a premium here. We feel sure that THE UNION and the PEOPLE will hold Chilton in line stronger than ever before.

"O."

THORSBY LETTER.

There are several photographers in town who are well equipped to do good work at reasonable prices. Mrs. Anderson, one of the party, does beautiful work in pyrography. You are welcome to inspect their work. All their articles would make very suitable holiday gifts. Mrs. Swan, Mrs. Gerald, Mrs. Neal and Miss Lida Neal were visitors in Clanton last Friday. Mr. James Bosworth has returned to Birmingham after spending two pleasant weeks in Thorsby. Miss Gallagher spent Saturday and Sunday with home folks in Montgomery. Rev. Beal, of Howard college, delivered two eloquent sermons at the Baptist church on Sunday. He will be called to preach here in the future and we are glad to be given an opportunity to hear so able a speaker. Mr. and Mrs. Warner, of Montgomery, spent Sunday with the latter's parents. Miss Selma Malmquist, of Clanton, was a visitor in town on Tuesday. The Sunshine Society held a good meeting with Miss Gronquist on the 21st. Mr. Denman, of Jacksonville, Ala., is a visitor in Thorsby. Mr. Fred Howard, who has spent the summer in Green Bay, Wis., has arrived in Thorsby, where he will spend the winter. He reports a good canning season in the north.

Dear Union:

Again we take up the pen to perform the pleasant duty of addressing the readers of the Union. Horse trading is a very interesting feature of business here at present, conducted by F. J. Fitts and Tom Glass. D. C. Hubbard, of Jemison, visited his son here last Sunday. B. V. Washburn was in town Monday. Such lovely weather as November is giving us is just delightful, calm and bright, and with it such a profusion of autumn flowers, those beautiful flowers seem so appropriate to cheer the dying year. We find them everywhere on the lapel of men's coats, on the pulpit, in stores, and recently while passing Cedar Grove cemetery near Thorsby we noticed some of the graves were decorated with those lovely flowers of autumn. Such a scene caused us to think of the resurrection, when men and women will be restored to life. Though dead those loved ones are not forgotten, as shown by the flowers on their last resting place; not only are they remembered by friends, but are stamped on the tablet of our Creator's memory and their resurrection is guaranteed by the death of the world's Redeemer. We welcome the correspondent from Rocky Mount. The people of Macedonia, out on the east side, are painting their church house. We suppose Macedonia is one of the oldest churches in the county. She has had a number of noble men for pastor, among whom were Hand, Lee, Honeycutt and others. The worth of the one true church, pure, holy and chaste, has not been duly appreciated. Holy writ describes her as the salt of the earth. One poet has described her as

"Church of God, thou spotless virgin,'
"Church of Christ, for whom He died,"
"Thou hast known on human founder,'
"Jesus bought thee for His bride."

Oh! how creeds and sects pale into insignificance before such noble men and women as Luther, Bunyan, Wesley, Madam Guyon, Warner, Warren Kahn, Barton, Draper, McPhail Knapp and others. Then we come to our own section. We look with admiration on the self-sacrifice of such people as Honeycutt, Brasher, Mrs Mitchell, Lumpkin, Thornton, Han and others, and we would never forget to appreciate the brave self-sacrific of those more obscure workers in our own section, among whom are Ale Glasscock, J. B. Northcutt, C. L. Barrett, E. J. Scott, Mrs. Kate Anderson Miss Lizzie Waldrup, Prof. Anderson Mrs. A. A. Jackson and others. Self sacrifice is what counts both politicall and religiously. May the UNION grow stronger and stronger, and continue to be the searchlight of Chilton.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

MARS HILL.

I want to correct a mistake in my last letter. It was O. P. Scott who moved to Active. We are sorry to lose him, but he is a good union man and expects to visit our Union quite often. Mars Hill Union is thriving and we cordially invite visitors from other UNIONS. Our meeting time is second and fourth Saturdays at 2 p. m. I would like to hear from others in OUR county paper, THE UNION. I noticed in the National Co-Operator that our editor (Mr. Edler) is one of us, and that he agrees to print anything concerning the UNION. But I don't believe in making our business public, not even any resolutions adopted by the different Unions. Keep it so that a non-union man will know nothing of what we do in the Union. Let him come in and take the obligation and be one of us. M. P. Johnson has bought a house in Jemison and will move his family there soon. He intends working on the R. R. and has rented his home place to Clifford Watson. Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Scott visited J. R. Marlar's Saturday. Our mail carrier says that a deal of mail goes to Guin, Ala. You know what that means. Our school is very large, and we hope to soon have our new school house done, and then we'll move out of the church into it. Will Redding was a visitor here Friday. He says he's going to Louisiana soon on a visit to relatives. Armon Scott, of Randolph, visited relatives here Saturday. Well, judge of my pleasant surprise when I saw THE young man go over the big hill again last Sunday. You see I'm still watching his travels.

DAD'S PLOW BOY.

CANE CREEK.

The death angel visited the home of Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Little Thursday night and took their little son, Enoch. We deeply sympathize with the bereaved parents. Weep not, dear father and mother, but try to live so that you will meet him in that bright world beyond this vale of tears. Our Sunday school is progressing nicely. Our school is on a "boom" under the faithful management of Prof. J. T. Williams. Well, I'll close with best wishes to the dear old UNION.

NORA KILLGORE.

S. C. A. NOTICE.

Clanton, Ala., Nov. 20, 1905.

Each school district is requested to meet at their respective school houses on the 2nd day of December following for the purpose of electing officers of their divisions of S. C. A. and to elect three delegates to attend the county meeting at Clanton December 9, 1905. The county meeting will elect officers for the year 1906, also delegates to the State association. The S. C. A. has succeeded beyond our most sanguine expectations, yet there is much to be done. We must not think that because cotton is bringing a fair price that there is nothing further for us to do, as nothing is more untrue. Should we stop for a rest as the hare in the fable the bear (tortoise) will win the race in the end. Hoping that each district in the county will be represented, I am, respectfully, J. N. DENNIS,
Secretary.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

Fine, pleasant weather, people done gathering and everything moving along nicely. Our school is proving a success under the able management of Prof. James A. Thomas. Rev. W. P. Lowery will preach here on the fourth Sunday (26th). W. H. Foshee is erecting a residence. R. W. and R. E. L. Ward made a business trip to Selma the past week. We are glad to say that Mrs. J. J. Culp is convalescing after some five weeks' sickness. The wheel of time is rolling towards the year 1906. Let us all determine to do better the coming year than in the past; more and better deeds. Best wishes to The Union and its readers.

UNION MAN.

CLANTON R. F. D.

Ha, ha, Mr. Editor, here I come again. I was in town the other day and it looked strange to me to see some of the "big" democrats going round in their shirt sleeves. They have to work now. They have lost all hope of carrying the county since Roosevelt passed through, and the people saw that the president was not a negro, and that Mrs. Roosevelt sits at the table with a white man, so the democrats will have to spin a new yarn. Then I met an old farmer and got to talking about the times, and he says "it's so good that we'll keep it so." Hooray for the farmers! They know a good thing when they buy it. The merchants were all busy taking in the cash the farmers laid down, and my mind ran back to the Cleveland times, and I felt glad that we had changed. I hope the people will not forget those democratic times. I sympathize with Mr Wade in the loss of his gin by fire. Say, wasn't "Just a Voter's" piece a pointer? He thinks that something slick had been done. Tell him for me that they use that slick stuff to run the democratic machine. It's the only stuff that keeps the old thing going. I hear that Clanton has an ordinance prohibiting country people from selling beef, etc., on the streets without they pay for a license. Let's look into this law a little. There are three markets in Clanton, so this law is for the pockets of these three market men and forces people to go to them and pay a high price for their food. Now, farmers, ask good prices for your yearlings and pork hogs. Don't let the market men make their license money out of you, but if the people of Clanton want such laws, then let those people "pay the fiddler." The new school house in Clanton looks like a "city set upon a hill."

HOSPITALS CROWDED

MAJORITY OF PATIENTS WOMEN

Mrs. Pinkham's Advice Saves Many From this Sad and Costly Experience.

It is a sad but true fact that every year brings an increase in the number of operations performed upon women in our hospitals. More than three-fourths of the patients lying on those snow white beds are women and girls who are awaiting or recovering from operations made necessary by neglect.

Every one of these patients had plenty of warning in that bearing down feeling, pain at the left or right of the womb, nervous exhaustion, pain in the small of the back, leucorrhœa, dizziness, flatulency, displacements of the womb or irregularities. All of these symptoms are indications of an unhealthy condition of the ovaries or womb, and if not heeded the trouble will make headway until the penalty has to be paid by a dangerous operation, and a lifetime of impaired usefulness at best, while in many cases the results are fatal.

The following letter should bring hope to suffering women. Miss Luella Adams, of the Colonnade Hotel, Seattle, Wash., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"About two years ago I was a great sufferer from a severe female trouble, pains and headaches. The doctor prescribed for me and finally told me that I had a tumor on the womb and must undergo an operation if I wanted to get well. I felt that this was my death warrant, but I spent hundreds of dollars for medical help, but the tumor kept growing. Fortunately I corresponded with an aunt in the New England States, and she advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it was said to cure tumors. I did so and immediately began to improve in health, and I was entirely cured, the tumor disappearing entirely, without an operation. I wish every suffering woman would try this great preparation."

Just as surely as Miss Adams was cured of the troubles enumerated in her letter, just so surely will Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cure every woman in the land who suffers from womb troubles, inflammation of the ovaries, kidney troubles, nervous excitability and nervous prostration.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all young women who are ill to write her for free advice. Address, Lynn, Mass.

Secret of Life.

There is good authority for the statement that at various times Herbert Spencer, Charles Darwin, Thomas H. Huxley and Louis Pasteur were convinced that they had discovered the secret of life, but repeated tests, in which antecedent life was more carefully excluded, showed in every instance that they had been mistaken.

The captain of the Oteri, who refused to aid the Government yacht Sylph when the latter vessel was in danger of floundering, lost his license and his career is ended in disgrace—as it should be. Fortunately there are few captains afloat like the former master of the Oteri, and what few there are have not yet been found out. His crime was most unusual, for those who do business on the great deep recognize the constant peril of the seas and help one another as a matter of course, every man knowing that it may be his turn tomorrow to ask for help. The captain of the Oteri ought to be thankful that he escaped the penalty inflicted upon "Old Floyd Ireson," who, charged with a similar crime, was "tarred and feathered and carried in a cart by the women of Marblehead."

PASSING OF PORRIDGE.

Makes Way For the Better Food of a Better Day.

"Porridge is no longer used for breakfast in my home," writes a loyal Briton from Huntsville, Ont. This was an admission of no small significance to one "brought up" on the time-honored stand-by.

"One month ago," she continues, "I bought a package of Grape-Nuts food for my husband, who had been an invalid for over a year. He had passed through a severe attack of pneumonia and la grippe combined, and was left in a very bad condition when they passed away.

"I tried everything for his benefit, but nothing seemed to do him any good. Month followed month and he still remained as weak as ever. I was almost discouraged about him when I got the Grape-Nuts, but the result has compensated me for my anxiety.

"In the one month that he has eaten Grape-Nuts he has gained 10 pounds in weight, his strength is rapidly returning to him, and he feels like a new man. Now we all eat Grape-Nuts food and are the better for it. Our little 5-year-old boy, who used to suffer from pains in the stomach after eating the old-fashioned porridge, has no more trouble since he began to use Grape-Nuts, and I have no more doctor's bills to pay for him.

"We use Grape-Nuts with only sweet cream, and find it the most tasty dish in our bill of fare.

"Last Monday I ate 4 teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts and cream for breakfast, nothing else, then set to work and got my morning's work done by 9 o'clock, and felt less tired, much stronger, than if I had made my breakfast on meat, potatoes, etc., as I used to. I wouldn't be without Grape-Nuts in the house for any money." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. There's a reason.

ITCHING SCALP HUMOR

Lady Suffered Tortures Until Cured by Cuticura—Scratched Day and Night.

"My scalp was covered with little pimples and I suffered tortures from the itching. I was scratching all day and night, and I could get no rest. I washed my head with hot water and Cuticura Soap and then applied the Cuticura Ointment as a dressing. One box of the ointment and one cake of Cuticura Soap cured me. Now my head is entirely clear and my hair is growing splendidly. I have used Cuticura Soap ever since and shall never be without it. (Signed) Ada C. Smith, 309 Grand St., Jersey City, N. J."

It is one of the paradoxes of life, and one of the most consoling, that the line between enlightened selfishness and altruism is in the main imaginary, avers Collier's Weekly. Happiness for one's self comes least when it is sought to the detriment of others. The mind which is bent on spending a life not entirely bad or vain is likely to feel a deeper satisfaction than the one which calculates narrowly its possibilities of pleasure or advantage. A youth of our acquaintance, talking to a woman of experience, explained that he was abandoning journalism because he had got out of it all that it had for him. "Oh," she replied quietly, "so you have been doing the work for what you can get out of it, and not for what you can put into it?" It was a rebuke which he did not forget, and yet in that young man's case, as in the majority of others, most was put in where most was taken out. It was really because he had ceased to be able to add anything new to what he contributed, that he felt that his work was giving nothing back to him.

WASTED TO A SHADOW.

But Found a Cure After Fifteen Years of Suffering.

A. H. Stotts, messenger at the State Capitol, Columbus, O., says:

"For fifteen years I had kidney troubles, and though I doctored faithfully, could not find a cure. I had heavy backaches, dizzy headaches and terrible urinary disorders. One day I collapsed, fell insensible on the sidewalk, and then wasted away in bed for ten weeks. After being given up, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. In a couple of months I regained my old health, and now weigh 188 pounds. Twelve boxes did it, and I have been well two years."

How to Catch Crows.

In order to catch crows, which do so much damage to the growing crops, Italian farmers have taken to placing small pieces of meat in conical-shaped paper bags, and smearing the inside of these bags with glue. When the bird puts his head in and finds himself blind-folded he flies upward to an immense height, but falls near his starting place.

Car Load of Ants.

The Clyde Steamship Company brought a car load of ants to port a few days ago from New York. The ants were of a peculiar variety, found in Central America, and said to be destructive of the boll weevil, the great enemy of the cotto plannt. The insects were shipped in glass tubes properly encased.

FARM AND GARDEN

VALUE OF EARLY MOULTERS.

Of really more value than the earliest hatched pullets, are the early moulters—the hens which are now shedding their feathers and getting into their fall and winter coats. They are the hens that stand us in for profit in our poultry during the late fall and early winter months. The early moulters should be watched after closely and given the very best of attention. Care should be taken now to keep them free from mites and lice. This can be best effected by keeping their roosting perches well oiled with coal oil, care also being taken to chase a blaze of burning paper along the under-side of the perches about once a week, to keep any vermin from lodging and hatching there. Then we should see to it that they have a good place in which to dust. This is very important, as it tends to keep them free from the pests mentioned—it is nature's way—and also to hasten the dislodgement of ripe feathers, or rather, the dead feathers they are engaged in moulting and in hastening the process generally. It is a good plan to keep the early moulters in a separate enclosure from the general flock and give them the choice bits of food from the wastage of the kitchen and the table, for variety in this line means health and thrift for the fowls. As the season advances and the cooler nights come on, tempered, or intensified by early frosts, it's a good idea then to roost the early moulters warmly, so that they may keep up a continuous progress and have no back-sets of any kind. This system of feed and management, will bring the hens into early fall laying and hold them to it all through the winter, when their eggs may either be sold at a good profit, or set in incubators and converted into valuable chickens. The early pullets should have similar care and attention, for they are also of much value in the early winter season.—H. B. Geer, in The Epitomist.

KEEP A FEW SHEEP.

"The price of sheep has reached a point where it is profitable to produce them for wool alone, which fact is made more evident by a visit to the show yards of any of our leading fairs," says an old sheep breeder. "If we can accept as reasonable authority a large number of entries in fine wool sheep, there is where we get a forerunner of the future." He believes that the most profitable sheep to grow with the price of wool is a medium-size sheep with a good carcass of mutton, and good, dense fleece of medium wool. "When we undertake to produce a wooled sheep with no reference to the mutton quality and gain but a few cents' worth of wool, and when we seek only mutton without regard to the wool quality, we meet the same objection on the other side." He thinks there is room on every farm for a few good sheep, and certainly in this day, when there are so many good breeders striving to excel, offering their stock at moderate prices, there is no excuse for any farmer to still be growing scrubs. A few sheep can be kept on every farm with a small outlay and with profitable results. It is only when one attempts to make a specialty of the sheep business that expense becomes apparent and trained experience necessary. A few sheep will keep fat picking up weeds and brush along the fence, feed that would not otherwise be utilized. They not only do this, but keep the farm clean, which is of even as much importance to the following crops as it is a benefit to the sheep themselves. Every farmer ought to grow a few sheep, which he would find a source of profit by producing two crops a year and without any apparent cost, as compared with the cost of producing any crop that is grown upon the farm for sale.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

HEALTH OF SWINE.

Until we know all about swine diseases there is no possibility of preventing entirely the coming of the epidemics of cholera that so often cut down the number of our hogs. However, from a long experience I have come to the conclusion that most hog diseases are preventable, writes Henry Porter in Farmer's Review. One way to prevent hog diseases is to purchase as few hogs as possible, and when we do purchase, quarantine till the animals are demonstrated to have or not to have some contagious disease. We would do well to limit our hog purchases to the breeding animals of quality needed to raise the quality of our swine product. But in addition to breeding hogs a great many others are purchased, sold, resold, transported, driven to town, and from farm to farm and carried in dirty box cars that perhaps have carried sick hogs previously. It is this general mixing up that makes it easy for the cholera to get in. By conducting our breeding operations on more of a perfect system we can keep hogs from coming to our farm, doing our own breeding and sending the animals to market only.

FEEDING SHEEP IN THE CORN.

I had a fine field of corn, and the rich soil had become filled with weeds of many kinds. In an evil hour, I thought it would be a very nice thing to turn into this field a lot of lambs just weaned. It was only a few days when I was sorry for what I had done. It did not suit my case at all. The heavy growth of suckers from the corn roots, which in my experience is always to be expected in richly manured soil, in spite of the most careful culture, very soon brought on attacks of diarrhea which very nearly cost me the lives of as fine a lot of weanling lambs as I ever saw, writes H. Stewart in American Sheep Breeder. It was next to impossible to keep any sort of satisfactory oversight on the lambs, and in spite of the most careful watching over the flock I soon had my hands full of trouble in saving a lot of lambs suffering from diarrhea and annoyed by a legion of flies. For two weeks everything had to be left to take care of those lambs, and the cost of the extra work at a busy time otherwise, about rendered me wild. Diarrhea attacked the whole flock and the flies made things a hundred times worse. I saved the lambs, but it was at a cost of half the actual value of the lot.

IRRIGATION ON THE FARM.

All natural streams over land are more or less crooked, as they bend first one way and then another to avoid obstructions. In making artificial open ditches there is at first an almost irresistible tendency to follow the natural course and simply deepen it. But after the ditch is cut, if it is a cultivated field, the crooked places in it make serious difficulties for the plow, the harrow, cultivator and the mowing machine. Only for a pasture lot is the winding rivulet running through a field allowable, providing it can easily be remedied. By straightening an open drain, and putting sewer pipes in it, the ditch may be filled and plowed over, making a rich, cultivable field of what was originally only fit for growing coarse and inferior grasses.

CULTIVATING FOR A PLOW.

Farmers use the cultivator for a plow; that is, they cultivate deep, with the object of loosening the soil between the rows. If the ground is to be broken up the plow is the thing to do it with, but two inches is sufficient depth for cultivation. Grass and weeds should never be allowed to grow to a height to demand "plowing" with a cultivator. Keep the top soil loose, and never allow grass or weeds to more than sprout above ground. Deep cultivation frequently does harm in disturbing the roots of plants grown as a crop.

Presumptuous Mendicant.

"Doesn't it strike you as somewhat ridiculous that a beggar should be so presumptuous as to offer you good luck?" asked the man with his arm in a sling. "It has struck me that way, and the next beggar that makes any attempt to pass good luck on me is going to get a run for his trouble. If I don't put him in the lockup, it won't be any fault of mine. I'm going to tell you fellows a story, and when you hear it you'll understand my feelings. I was standing on a street corner the other day talking to a friend of mine. A beggar, a husky looking country negro, came along and asked us for aid. He said he was from the country and was in hard luck. 'Ah'm hungry, boss,' he said, 'an' Ah needs a bite to eat.' Then he showed his hands, which were covered with corns, remarking at the time that the condition of these would prove he was a hard-working negro, down on his luck. I gave him enough to buy a sandwich, and so did my friend. He thanked us, and then putting out his hand said, 'Hyar boss. Ah'll give bofe of yo' good luck.' We both smiled and gave him our hand to shake. The negro left and a few minutes later when I turned to leave my friend and started across the street I was struck by a car and knocked into the middle of nothingness. When they picked me up my arm was broken and I was severely bruised all over the body. That was my share of the good luck. I learned today that my friend has pneumonia, and that he may die of his illness."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Paints Wild Beasts' Eyes.

One of the oddest ways a young woman artist of this city has of adding to her income is the painting of the glass eyes that are fitted into the heads of wild animals sent to a taxidermist to be stuffed and mounted. She is not called upon to paint these special eyes for the ordinary run of our native beasts. She only gets one of these orders when some sportsman has killed a panther, a grizzly, or a tiger—animals noted for the savage glare of their eyes. Then she takes all the pains she is capable of to get the "glare" just as savage as she can. Before she begins work she learns in just what attitude the beast is to be mounted, for it would never do to represent the animal with his eyes ablaze with the light of battle if he was to be postured as lying half asleep. The work does not pay well. Sometimes the artist gets only a dollar a pair for the eyes, while now and again she gets as much as $2 a pair.—

FEEDING OF CANAL MEN.

J. E. MARKEL TELLS ABOUT HIS BIG PANAMA CONTRACT.

He Expects to Provide Food for 20,000 Men at a Time—Board Will Cost from 45 Cents to $1 a Day—All Supplies to Be Shipped from New York, Direct.

J. E. Markel, who has just obtained the contract to feed the workmen on the Panama Canal, began the business of feeding people nearly fifty years ago when, as a boy, he took a contract to feed workmen on a big flatboat between St. Louis and New Orleans, on the Mississippi, writes the Omaha (Neb.) correspondent of the New York Sun. He was raised on a farm near Mark Twain's place in eastern Missouri, and after his experience on the flatboat he settled down in St. Louis to become a baker.

Next he drifted to the West, and in 1872 began operating eating houses along the Union Pacific, with which road he continued for thirty years. In addition to his Panama interests, Mr. Markel at present operates the boarding and eating houses along the lines of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton, the Illinois Central, the Denver and Rio Grande, the Rock Island, the Kansas City Southern, the Denver and Northwestern and the new Moffatt railroads, and manages a number of big hotels in Western cities.

His great experience in feeding crowds placed him in a position to bid intelligently for the Panama contract. Regarding the contract and his plans, Mr. Markel says:

"The contract is not a $50,000,000 one to feed any 50,000 men, as the newspapers have reported. I don't believe there will ever be more than 20,000 men employed at any one time. The contract runs for five years.

"I was first invited last March to go to the Isthmus by Mr. Wallace, and I was studying the conditions when he left. I kept watch of things and continued my investigations until I found out just what was wanted.

"I spent a whole month down there, and when I finished I knew what was necessary and knew just what I was bidding on. The result was that I got the contract.

"What the commission wanted and what I am going to furnish is a system of substantial meals at reasonable prices, so that the employes on the canal can afford to buy them and will be in condition to return the commission in labor the worth of their wages.

"For instance, the Jamaica negroes, now about 4,000 employed on the canal are scattered along in camps from one to two miles apart, there being thirty camps along the forty-seven miles of canal. These camps have from 200 to 300 negroes each.

"The houses are built especially for the purpose and are thoroughly sanitary. There are strict rules for keeping them clean. The negroes have to have everything cleaned up by a certain hour each morning. The houses are thoroughly scrubbed once a week and fumigated every two weeks. They have comfortable canvas beds.

"But when it comes to eating, the only things they can afford to buy with their money, as things now are on the Isthmus, are sugar cane, bananas and such stuff, and a man can't stand up and do a hard day's work on such a diet and give back the value of his wages. Eggs are 10 cents apiece, salt fish is 40 cents a pound, fresh meat from 50 cents to a dollar a pound, and everything in proportion.

"Now we are going to offer them three meals a day with such stuff as coffee, bread and meat for breakfast; coffee, bread, fish, two kinds of vegetables and pie or pudding for dinner; and much the same for supper, at 45 cents a day or $14 a month.

"In addition, we will have a place at each camp where we will sell cooked food in bulk to the men with families who want to take it home, or to the men who live in clubs and do their own cooking, or part of it, and want to buy a portion ready cooked. There is no compulsion about buying from us; the men can buy wherever they please, but I agree with the commission to have the food there to offer to the men at reasonable prices.

"For the white men, of whom there are 1,500 now, and there will be 3,000 later, we will run hotels. Two are now finished and the number will be increased to ten. We furnish them first class board at $1 a day, and rooms at $6 a month each, making the cost of living $36 a month each.

"Before these prices were made we figured it out with the commission that laborers generally in this country have to pay from 40 to 50 percent of their wages for living purposes; and clerks and other salaried men in cities about the same proportion. So we figured on the canal to keep down the cost of living to between 40 and 50 percent of the wages.

"The Jamaica negroes get from $1.75 to $2.25 silver each a day. This is from 90 cents to $1.10 gold, so the commission held the cost of living down to 45 cents a day. Most of the clerks get from $150 to $175 a month, so their living is also made comparatively cheap.

"I shall assemble all my supplies at New York for shipment to the Isthmus; my buying will be done wherever it can be done to the best advantage. The commission ships my stuff for me on refrigerator steamers at a rate that just covers the actual cost; it gives me cold storage rooms at Colon also at cost or just a little above cost.

"Practically everything will have to be shipped. There is absolutely nothing that can be bought on the Isthmus. The natives are too worthless and lazy to raise anything. As fine fish as I ever saw can be caught on the Isthmus, but the natives never catch enough to amount to anything.

"But I believe that the work of sanitation which is now going on [illegible] fact that the natives will have to clean themselves and their houses clean and do things differently will induce them to do some work on the canal when we get substantial food to them and enable them to do hard work.

"As it is now their sugar cane and banana diet makes it impossible for them to stand more than one day's hard work; and that gives them a dollar or so and enables them to buy rum and everything they need under present conditions for several days. So they are not much good now, but I believe within the next two years our system of feeding these people will make workmen out of great numbers of them.

"This is a big contract, but except for a difference in climate there is no difference other than size between it and the large railroad contracts I have been handling for many years."

PROBLEMS OF LAW.

Cases With Which English Judges and Lawyers Have Struggled.

Hundreds of years of test cases have not yet elucidated all the possible points of difficulty in the English law.

Here is a remarkable problem with which the Blackburn lawyers have just been confronted. An English gentleman had twin sons who were born within a few minutes of each other. He made a will that his property in Australia should go to whichever of the two sons arrived at the age of 21 first.

The younger of the two emigrated to Australia, while the other one remained in England, and the former was still in the antipodes at the time of his coming of age. Now Australia time is some time in advance of Greenwich, and, therefore, the young man out there was 21 before his elder brother at home. Which of these two brothers is legally entitled to the property? The question has not yet been decided, and in the mean time readers may exercise their own acumen upon it.

Are eggs eggs, or are only hens' eggs eggs? This may seem a ridiculous question, but nice shades of meaning are involved, and a case which turned upon it went through two or three courts of law. A lady sent an order for a dozen eggs to a dairyman and he sent her ducks' eggs. She sent them back as not being what she ordered, but he refused to take them. She, in turn, declined to keep them, and some time elapsing between their journeys from the house to the shop, the eggs went bad, and eventually the shopkeeper sued the lady for 1s. 6d., their value.

The county court judge ordered her to pay, declaring that ducks' eggs were as much eggs as any others; but the woman appealed, and King's Bench reversed the decision on the ground that when a party ordered eggs, hens' eggs were meant, and if any other contention were admitted any kind of eggs might be sent, such as pigeons', canaries' or even rattlesnakes'. Ducks' eggs, it was decided, were not eggs in the ordinary meaning of the term.

Are the grandchildren of a man also his children? In the legal sense this question is not so absurd as it looks, and some time ago it was seriously and laboriously contended in the courts that according to act of parliament they were.

The particular act in question, passed in the reign of the late Queen Victoria, laid it down that "the father and the grandfather, the mother and the grandmother, and the children of any poor person being of sufficient ability, shall relieve and maintain any such poor person."

The argument was that, according to the context, grandchildren were to be reckoned as children for this purpose, just as grandparents were reckoned as parents. On the other side it was argued that if grandchildren were children, then great-grandchildren were children also, and that a man might in this way be called upon to support his father and mother, his four grandparents, his eight great-grandparents and as many grandchildren and great-grandchildren as he might be lucky or unlucky enough to possess.

Is skimmed milk milk? A man asked for a glass of milk to drink and was given skimmed milk, and the purveyor was fined for it; but in a higher court the decision was reversed, it being contended at the time that skimmed milk was really much more milk than milk that was not skimmed, since the latter contained something that was not milk at all—that is, cream.—Tit-Bits.

The Typewriter's Experience.

A little event fraught with [illegible] significance was the celebration the other day in New York of the thirtieth anniversary of the entrance into business life of the pioneer woman typewriter. All that innovation of thirty years ago meant to the business world no one could have dreamed at the time, and if volumes were given to it now the story would not be half told. For the one women has now become a vast and ever-increasing host, and her gain to business interests in methods, legibility and accuracy, together with dispatch, in all transactions where writing is involved, has been enormous and proportionately great. The typewriter deserves distinction as the new and wild field of honorable and lucrative employment which opened to her sex none the less for the immeasurable benefits which her action has conferred upon the world.—Leslie's Weekly.

The Best Guide to Reading.

Of all the gifts an older brother or sister can confer upon a younger child, none can compare with the taste for good reading. It is an easy matter for the elder to bring the right book to the little reader at the right time, and no lasting benefit can be given with so little effort. See that you are able to act as a wise guide when the little brother's or sister's hand is put so confidingly in yours.—St. Nicholas.

London Taxes.

The taxpayers of Eastern London are complaining bitterly of the rigor of their assessment. The case is cited of a man who had his assessment raised because he erected a cucumber frame in his back garden.

In the recent thrilling discussions of various phases of civic transgressions, our popular magazines have discovered a new method of entertainment that puts old ways to shame. Character sketches of menagerie animals and of variety actresses pall in the presence of these accounts of boodling, graft, corruption, trust-management, and dissemination of microbes. Who can fail to be delighted at finding pictures of gifted criminals, accompanied by crisp, sensational phrases, setting forth their misdeeds; or, better still, at finding the portrait of the Bad Man on one page, and the Good Man on the next; with the privilege of guessing before reading which is which. It is a very melodrama of reform, in which every moment is a climax; an all-pervasive Madame Tussaud's chamber of horrors in pen and ink. These cheerful histories of crime, continues the Atlantic, set in the midst of gay pictures, dashing bits of verse, and smart stories, recall irresistibly to my mind an announcement which I saw a few years ago at the door of a prominent religious edifice in Boston: "Meeting at 3 p. m. Subject: The Unpardonable Sin. Bright and Enjoyable Service. All are invited."

One Cause of Poverty.

A Philadelphian was praising the late Mary Mapes Dodge.

"Wise woman as she was," he said, "Mrs. Dodge considered organized charity rather cold. She believed in the charity spirit, which, she said, was best fostered by the direct, personal contact of recipient and giver.

"Hence she never refused a beggar. And, defending herself from my attacks one day, she narrated a conversation that she once overheard between two Maryland tramps, or 'peach plucks.'

"These peach plucks, as they lay under a tree on a superb afternoon, philosophized.

"'Bill,' said the first, 'why is it that poor people is always willin' to help us, while rich folks always turns us down?'

"The other, with a mirthless laugh, replied:

A Queer Case of Friendship.

Friendship and possibly affection have sprung up between a cat and a large wild raccoon at Avery's logging camp, in Thurston County, Wash.

One morning recently the camp cook heard the cat mewing at the open kitchen door and purring in an inviting way. Investigation showed the coon with his front feet on the doorstep in apparent indecision as to whether freedom was worth giving up for his new partner. Every day since the coon has come to the cook's tent to play with the cat, and present indications are that he will soon become entirely domesticated.

The Great Tonic is Guaranteed to Give Satisfaction.

Weak and unhealthy kidneys are responsible for more sickness and suffering than any other disease; therefore, when, through neglect or other cause, kidney trouble is permitted to continue, fatal results are sure to follow.

It used to be considered that only urinary and bladder troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all diseases have their beginning in the disorders of these most important organs.

Your other organs may need attention—but your kidneys most, because they do most and need your attention first.

If you are sick or "feel badly," begin taking GILBERT'S GRAVEL WEED COMPOUND, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy, because as soon as your kidneys are well they will help all the other organs to health. A trial will convince any one. Write us for a sample of this famous remedy—will be sent free of charge.

Life Insurance Assets Doubled Since ..1896..

By Vice-President Kingsley, of the New York Life.

IT is the fashion in these days to decry the great extent of American life insurance, to point to its size and success as in some way a menace and a danger. As a matter of fact, life insurance has barely kept pace with other branches of modern business; it is not singular in its enormous development. Let me give you some instructive comparisons:

The assets of the life companies reporting to New York state doubled between the close of 1896 and the close of 1904. They sprang from $1,228,000,000 to $2,454,000,000. Insurance in force went from $5,000,000,000 to $10,000,000.

At the close of the Spanish war the total national bank circulation was $240,000,000. In seven years this has expanded 110 percent. In the same time the resources of national banks have increased from $4,000,000,000 to $7,300,000,000. The resources of other banks increased from $4,500,000,000 to $9,000,000,000, while the cash holdings of all banks increased during that time $570,000,000.

In eight years from 1896 to 1904 dividends by railroads went from $81,000,000 to $190,000,000. Earnings of national banks went from $50,000,000 to $113,000,000 annually. The annual transactions of the New York Clearing House increased from $29,000,000,000 to $60,000,000. Exports of mining products doubled. The revenues of the United States incraesed over 60 percent. Immigration increased over 150 percent.

HUSBANDS have a faculty of bringing home friends to dinner, without giving notice to their wives, and if any remonstrances are offered on the part of the priestesses of the kitchen, these husbands assume a highly dignified and very much injured air, and propose the conundrum:

"Haven't I right to invite an old friend to my own house, I wonder?"

If you are a woman, and have "kept house," of course you are well aware that when your husband brings home an old friend at dinner time, he invariably selects a day when there is nothing new for dinner, and when that meal is to be made up from the odds and ends of yesterday. There will be cold greens, and a bread pudding, and potatoes warmed over, and a pie so small that it was a mathematical problem in your mind all the forenoon how it could be cut into eight pieces, and still leave enough to each piece so that it might conscientiously be called a piece.

The "old friend" will enter, bland and smiling, and beg you not to make any change on his account. Be sure and not put yourself out in the least. He isn't particular, not he! He came to see your husband, and talk over old times, not to get his dinner. Certainly not.

And you, in your soiled calico wrapper, which you neglected to change after breakfast, stand there and listen to him, and your face is crimson hot, and you feel sure that you never looked worse, and you wished the "old friend" at the antipodes.

For you are painfully conscious that those cold greens are a little tough, and there isn't enough bread on the plate to look decent.

And these "old friends" are generally men with prodigious appetites. No dyspepsia for them.

You wonder if he will see that spot of gravy on the tablecloth, got on yesterday by the youngest boy, and you are in agony lest some of your hungry flock of youngsters may clamor for two pieces of pie each, as they frequently do.

You beg your guest to "make a dinner," and apologize by telling him that it is your ironing day, and you did not expect company to dinner.

And he will doubtless assure you that your dinner is excellent, and tell you that he doesn't know when he has eaten such a meal.

And after he gets home he will tell his wife that he took dinner at Brown's, and he guesses Brown's wife must be a "poor sozzle"—for such a dinner, for company, he never saw! Cold greens and bread pudding! and there was a spot of gravy on the tablecloth as big as his hand.

If your family be a large one, your means abundant, and you have plenty of help, of course company at dinner is no trouble; but if we were a man, and our wife kept no servant, and our larder was not always filled with luxuries, we should think twice before we took home old friends to feed, without giving our wife due notice.—New York Weekly.

SOUTHERN COTTON ASSOCIATION

Chilton Co. Sub-Division.

To Farmers, Landlords and Tenants:

At the meeting of the executive committee of the S. C. A. at Asheville, N. C., the assessment on every bale of cotton grown by members was placed at 3 cents.

At a meeting of the Chilton Co. association the county ex. committee was empowered to enforce this assessment.

The amount is small, and it is hoped that those even not members will co-operate in raising it.

The association has already added millions to the wealth of our country and the price of cotton would likely now rule at 8 cents but for it. The public ginneries are authorized to collect this 3 cents per bale.

W. H. CONWAY, President.
J. N. DENNIS, Secretary.

SOUTHERN COTTON ASSOCIATION

Address From President Harvie Jordan Relating to Reorganization.

The annual reorganization and re-election of all the officers of the Southern Cotton Association in all of the cotton growing counties and parishes is near at hand. The election of officers and delegates for all the civil sub-divisions, townships, militia districts and school precincts, as they are differently termed in the several States, will take place on the first Saturday in December. Farmers, merchants and bankers are urgently requested to meet on that day at their local meeting points in the various sections of the county and choose from one to five delegates to represent them in their county organization. The county or parish meeting will be held at the county site on December 9th, or the following Saturday. These delegates will then perfect their county organization by the election of officers and the selection of from one to three delegates to represent their county or parish at the general State meetings. The State meetings will be held at the different State capitals on January 3rd, and delegates so chosen by the county organizations on December 9th will elect their State officers for 1906, and also the members of the executive committee of the Southern Cotton Association on the same basis of representation as for 1905. The executive committee of the national organization so chosen will meet at Hot Springs, Ark., on the third Tuesday in January, 1906.

Prompt Attention Urged.

Farmers throughout the cotton belt are urged to promptly attend this call on the first Saturday in December and get the machinery of the local organization in motion. Follow the different meetings up and let the association get on a sound, systematic and substantial basis. Members of the Farmers' Union and other organizations are cordially and earnestly invited to join the association that every farmer in the South may co-operate shoulder to shoulder for the one purpose of handling the great staple crop of the South at profitable prices to the producers. The press is earnestly requested to publish this call.

Very truly,
HARVIE JORDAN,
President Southern Cotton Association.

Jackson, was held before Justice C. N. Vaught. The result of the hearing was the release of J. F. Jackson, who it was proved, had no connection with the crime; the holding over of Charles Jackson without bond on a charge of murder in the first degree and the holding of Charles Webster under heavy bond as a witness for the prosecution.

VanHorn Case in Jasper Court.

Lineville, Ala.—The First National Bank of Lineville, of which R. L. Ivey is president, has closed its doors and suspended business. The First National was the older of the two Lineville banks. Anniston, Ala.—Ab Eichelberger, the 15-year-old son of Mr. George W. Eichelberger, was caught in the shafting of the gin at Oxford and seriously injured, his right leg being broken between the knee and thigh, one or two ribs being broken, and it is feared internal injuries were sustained. Young Eichelberger, with a couple of companions, had gone through the gin to get a drink of water, and in returning the boy was caught in the shafting.

To Hold Court in Chilton.

Montgomery, Ala.—Supernumerary Circuit Judge-at-Large A. H. Alston has requested by the governor to hold court in Chilton county for two weeks beginning Monday.

Interest in Elections.

Montgomery, Ala.—As the time draws nearer toward election it appears probable that within the next thirty days nearly every candidate will be out. It begins to look like a political reform wave has struck Alabama as it did many of the eastern cities and that the regular old-timer politician will be put in the background this time. It seems likely also that there will be many new faces at the capitol. It would not be surprising, say politicians, to see men elected who never held public office before. Is this coming? What will be the result? These questions will be better answered at the primary which is to be held next year. Will the primary be held early or will it be held late? Chairman Mallory, of the state democratic executive committee, favors a late primary. Which will win? The candidates, as a rule, favor an early primary, as they do not care to be in the race so long The interest in the race between Cunningham and Comer has somewhat abated, but an early revival of it is looked for.

Hard-Hearted Father.

Montgomery, Ala.—That fathers are sometimes willing to send their own sons to disgrace seems to be shown by the history of the conviction of Louis Schmidlkofer, of Lauderdale county, on a charge of forging the name of his parent to a note. The records show that the elder man sent his offspring to the penitentiary for the crime, and that he has not done anything since to get him out. In all the papers seeking a pardon, which was granted Saturday by the governor, there is nothing from the old man to indicate that he is willing or anxious to have the young fellow released. It is not known, as a matter of fact, whether he is alive or not, and the absence of any evidence of interest leads many to think he is not on earth.

New Bank at Eufaula.

Eufaula, Ala.—The matter of the establishment of a new bank here is assuming definite proportions, and every indication points to such an institution for the city in the near future. Lawrence Wild, for many years a resident of the city, but now a prominent mercantile man of Greenville, is expected to reach here next week, and will open such an institution if suitable arrangements can be made. It is believed that citizens are displeased at the stringent rules of exchange applied without discrimination to depositors and it is thought that this is what lead a prominent citizen to remark that he would take $10,000 stock in such an institution a few days ago.

Houston Farmers Organize.

Dothan, Ala.—Houston county farmers have organized a branch of the Southern Cotton Association and agreed to take 400 bales of cotton from the market for sixty days, or until the price of the staple touches 15 cents.

A big rally of the horticulturists will be held in Dothan December 16, at which President Seymour, of the Alabama division, and others will speak.

Demopolis Bank.

Demopolis, Ala.—The directors of the Robert Banking Company, of this city, will hold a called meeting in a few days for the purpose of increasing the capital stock from $50,000 to $100,000, of which $75,000 is to be paid in at once and the balance when the requirements of the business make it necessary.

Jim Bowie Paroled.

Montgomery, Ala.—After serving about eighteen months in the penitentiary for breaking into the depot at Oakman, Walker county, and purloining a jug of whisky, which he drank on the depot platform with his partner of the spree, Jim Bowie, a white convict, was given a parole by Governor Jelks on condition that he hereafter look away from all things intoxicating.

The robbery was perpetrated recently while the china was being conveyed in a barge from Meissen to Hamburg, stones being substituted in the chests for the china.

Saratoff, Russia.—The local zemstvo is protesting to Governor Sakharoff against the cruelty and violence of the Cossacks, who are charged with assaulting women. The provincial prisons are full of arrested prisoners.

HUNTED

Jews Like Animals and Great Streams of Blood Ran Through Streets.

THE PAVEMENTS WERE RED.

A Graphic Account of the Butcheries Given by an Eye-Witness of the Massacres.

Odessa.—The morning of Friday, November 3, the day following the beginning of the massacre, began quietly, and many thought the excesses were at an end. A number of shops were opened and people went out to do their marketing as usual.

Between 10 and 11 o'clock, however, the roughs came out of their hovels again in a mad anti-Jewish spirit. Firing seemed to break out suddenly all over the city, and like magic the mobs again formed and recommenced their pillaging.

This time, however, the Jews in a measure were prepared. They had secured some arms over night, and they protected themselves as best they could. They went to the roofs of their houses and then fired into the streets below wherever they heard a noise. This drove the mobs into a greater frenzy and made them absolutely pitiless toward all Jews, women and children, as well as men.

The Jews became almost insane with fear. Now and then a door of a Jew's shop would be cautiously opened and the proprietor, standing in the doorway, would rapidly empty his revolver, sometimes when there was nobody at all in the street, and then his door would close with a bang and the bolts would be drawn, while hysterical women's screams sounded inside.

The police did nothing either on Thursday or Friday. They are not to blame, for they had been disarmed and had been subjected to indignities by the town authorities as soon as Wednesday's news of the granting of a constitution had been received. The Odessa governors thought in this way they were showing themselves supporters of freedom, but instead they left the civil power entirely without means of stopping the excesses of the mobs.

Like the French revolution, suspicion that a man was an aristocrat was sufficient for his condemnation; so suspicion that a house harbored Jews was sufficient for an attack to be made on it.

Two friends and myself, in my house, had a vivid example of this. About 3 o'clock on Saturday there was a crowd about my house, when some one pointed out to the soldiers a small window near the roof of my house, and exclaimed that he saw a Jew face there.

Immediately fury was let loose. The soldiers took deliberate aim over the heads of the crowd and fired. The mob took up the cry, "They are harboring Jews! Throw down the Jews! Wreck the house!"

It was a trying time for us. We three were alone in the house, with several Russian servants, who were crazed with fright and who kept urging us to take refuge in the barn. We could not hope to protect ourselves once the mob got in, and matters would have looked bad for us, for though there were no Jews in the house we had a number of sporting guns, and the mob would undoubtedly have been driven mad by the sight of them.

The people ran into our front yard and scrambled up a ladder to the roof, expecting to find Jews there. They came down disappointed, and were about to storm our front door when our janitor blocked the way, telling the mob there were no Jews inside. The mob took his coat from him and were about to brush him aside, when suddenly the crowd in the street shouted, "The Jews are next door! We see them!"

This cry took the people from my house, and they burst in next door, where they found a Jew and stabbed him to death amid nowls of glee. His body was thrown into the street, and the janitor of the house next door phlematically washed the blood off the pavement while the mob went howling away.

Later in the day the mob returned to the vicinity of my house and caught three Jews, whom they at once killed and robbed.

This is the way all Friday was spent. Firing hardly ceased for a moment. The sharp crack of rifles and revolvers sounded everywhere. Thursday was the day of lott, and Friday the day of slaughter.

Ambulances went about in the trail of the mob, like Red Cross wagons after a victorious army. People suffering from frightful wounds were picked up, sometimes five and six in a bunch, and then the ambulances raced back to the municipal hospitals to return once more to the battlefield for further victims.

Streams of blood ran along the gutters to the sewers, and the street stones were dyed a deep red. There was a stench of drying blood in the air, and one of the friends in my house, who had been through the Boer war, declared his preference for a South African battlefield to an Odessa street.

It was simply courting death for any one not a workingman or a rough to venture into the streets. The mobs held up passersby and at the point of the revolver compelled them to prove they were not Jews before letting them go. Bullets were flying about, fired with an uncertain aim that made them as likely to find an innocent billet as not.

But throughout it all the mob kept rigidly to its anti-Jew spirit. It did not seek to loot the shops of Christians nor to break in Christian houses unless it thought Jews were there. It was mad for the sight of Jew blood and Jew loot, and its madness remained in this straight channel.

At last, toward midnight, the street firing ceased and the mobs returned home, unable through physical exhaustion to continue the murder longer.

Odessa Friday night was a city of the dead, nearly 5,000 Jews having been offered up in sacrifice to the fury of the workingmen.

Papers Using Their Freedom.

St. Petersburg.—The radical papers are pursuing the same plan that they did in the case of General Trepoff, the former minister of the interior, and have now opened a regular campaign against M. Durnovo, minister of the interior, accusing him of being the enemy of the constitution and the supporter of reaction. They also join in a general demand for the immediate trial of the governors and other officials thus far removed, making a special point against M. Neidhardt, the former prefect of Odessa, who is called the "Russian Nero," and who, although removed from the prefecture, remains in the ministry of the interior. "All the military satraps must be brought to justice," is the cry of the radical papers.

America Ends Relations.

Washington, D. C.—Secretary Root has informed the Japanese government that he will hereafter conduct affairs relating to Korea through the Japanese legation here. The principle of the sovereignty of Korea is maintained and the existing treaty with that country will continue in force, and the American consuls there will be maintained without change in their exequaturs. The Korean legation in Washington, of course, will be withdrawn and all business relating to Korea will be transacted through the Japanese government. Mr. Morgan, our minister to Seoul, will necessarily be withdrawn, but it is the intention of the state department to provide a diplomatic post for him.

Sultan Uneasy.

Constantinople.—The sultan has ordered the arrest of Fohima Pasha, chief of secret police, on a charge of working against the ruler's interest. A big sensation was caused by the action. It is reported the Porte discovered a plot among the secret police to head a movement to dispose of Abdulhamid if he gives way to the demands of the powers. There is every indication that the crisis has reached the breaking point, though the belief prevails that the sultan is more afraid of the European powers than of his own subjects, and will surrender before any great damage has been done to the empire.

Killed in Automobile Wreck.

New York.—Mrs. Francis Burton Harrison, wife of ex-Congressman Francis Burton Harrison, was instantly killed Saturday in an automobile accident in Long Island City. The machine became untrollable on a steep hill on Thompson avenue, plunged to the side of the road and turned over. Mrs. Harrison's neck was broken. Lawrence I. Scott and his wife, of San Francisco, who were riding with Mrs. Harrison in the automobile, were injured. Mr. Scott had a hip broken and Mrs. Scott was slightly injured. Charles F. Crocker, brother of Mrs. Harrison, and the chauffeur were slightly hurt.

A Planned Revolution.

St. Petersburg.—That the outbreak at Sebastopol is no drunken frolic, as was the case at Cronstadt, but a seriously planned revolutionary demonstration, was made clear by the tone of an official statement issued by the admiralty, declaring that the sailors and several units of troops were acting under the direct influence of the socialistic propaganda.

MAN'S gratitude was the cause of the custom of setting apart one day of the year as a day of thanksgiving and praise toward the Giver of every good and perfect gift. The history of every nation of which records are preserved contains references to days of thanksgiving from the Hebrew Feast of Tabernacles, of which mention is made in the Bible, through the Greek festival of Demeter, god of the harvest, the Roman feast of Ceralia, goddess of plenty, to the Saxon Harvest-Home and our own Thanksgiving, now universally observed as a national holiday.

The history of Thanksgiving in America begins prior to the landing of the Pilgrim Fathers at Plymouth Rock in 1620. The first service of this character ever held in this country was celebrated on the bleak Newfoundland coast in 1578 by an English clergyman named Wolfall, who was connected with the Frobisher exploring party. Frobisher brought the first colony to settle on those shores; and to the Rev. Mr. Wolfall, otherwise unknown to fame, belongs the credit of the first evangelical sermon and the first celebration of the communion in North America. It was a service of grateful prayer and praise for their safe arrival and escape from the dangers of the deep.

Of similar character was the next recorded Thanksgiving service, twenty-nine years later, when the Popham colony arrived at Sagadahoc, on the coast of Maine, in August of 1607, and on the nineteenth of that month laid claim to the territory, unfurled the English flag and observed the day as one of praise and thanksgiving. This was three months after the landing of the colonists at Jamestown, in Virginia. The Popham colony not only held the first thanksgiving service on territory now comprised within the United States, but also held the first popular election and chose the first officers to govern an American community.

Thirteen years later came the Pilgrims, anchoring in Massachusetts Bay on Saturday, December 9 (O. S.). They deferred landing until Monday, despite their long sojourn on the sea, and we may well believe that their last Sabbath service on shipboard was eloquent with gratitude and praises to "Him who hath the steerage of our course."

During the cold and cruel winter that followed almost one-half of the little band were laid at rest on the bluff that had frowned upon the Mayflower, their graves being leveled that the Indians might not become aware of their diminishing number. Hopefully the remnant toiled through the summer, gathering a fair harvest. The old chronicler tells of indifferent barley and a failure in peas, offset to some extent by twenty acres of good corn. But meat of deer and wild fowl was abundant, the pestilence was stayed and they were comfortably housed for the winter. Therefore, on the twenty-fourth of October Governor Bradford proclaimed a thanksgiving feast. Carrying their muskets they marched in staid procession to the little meeting house, the Governor leading the way, with Elder Brewster reverently bearing the Bible on his right, and plain, matter-of-fact Miles Standish, the military chief of the colony, at his left—Law, supported by the church and the army. It was worthy of mention in the old annals that the elder's sermon was unusually short, not quite two hours! What would a nineteenth century congregation say to a discourse two hours long?

And then came the feast, at which were displayed the fine napery and household treasures brought from Old England—those precious relics whose possession in these days is the patent of American birth and nobility. It was an al fresco dinner, in the mild Indian summer; and at this time and place the American turkey, since sacred to the day, made his first appearance as the piece de resistance of a Thanksgiving dinner.

And after the solemn service in the little church and the decorous feast, served with Puritan sedateness, the people returned to their homes, and the early darkness settled down upon the little settlement, from which was to grow so grand a nation. Suddenly the peaceful night was broken by the sentry's peremptory challenge, the rattle of a drum, mingled with an Indian shout, and every man grabbed his trusty musket and rushed out, while the souls of the women and children quaked with fear. A hundred savages poured down upon them—Massasoit's braves, but on pacific errand bent. They came to share the white man's feast and brought deer and other game as their contribution. So the fires were lit again, and the good wives baked and boiled for their unexpected guests, who entertained them by performing their dances amid wild yells and menacing gestures. It was thought prudent to show the fierce intruders that the infant colony was not without defense, so Captain Standish ordered out his soldiers, drilled them, and finally ended with a volley from their muskets into the treetops and the discharge of the great cannon on the hill and the smaller one at the Governor's door. The Indians were properly impressed and begged the great Captain not to make it thunder again. Thus the first Thanksgiving of the Pilgrim Fathers was a strange blending of godly psalms and savage dances, the rattle of firearms and Indian warwhoops, with prayers and benedictions—typical, perchance, of the vicissitudes to be encountered in their New World home.

In November the ship Fortune arrived bringing thirty-five colonists, and much-needed supplies of clothing and ammunition, with news of the dear ones at home. Another Thanksgiving day was appointed, December 13.

In 1632 the little town of Boston was threatened with famine. Their crops had failed, and the ship which was expected to bring supplies from England had not arrived. The colonists feared the pitiless ocean had swallowed vessel and her precious freight. They were reduced to one scanty meal a day, and children cried on the streets for bread. Governor Winthrop called the men together, and after much deliberation a hunting expedition, though full of peril and toil, was determined upon. It was February; the snow was deep; the Indians, though not openly hostile, were not averse to reducing the number of the white invaders, and they could illy spare any of their number. They decided to observe a day of fasting and prayer on the morrow, then venture into the pathless forest in search of game. But in the morning, when they went out, there lay upon the cold blue waters of the bay the white wings of the long-expected ship. The starving people rushed down to the beach, tears in every eye, hope and gratitude in every heart. Their fasting was once again turned into feasting, their supplications into thanksgivings; and with one accord they assembled at the church. It is recorded that the minister read the one hundred and third Psalm—"Bless the Lord, oh, my soul, and forget not all His benefits!" voicing the thanks of a grateful people who found the ways of Providence, so mysterious to our blind eyes, "a very present help in time of trouble." For again and again, as we read these old chronicles, we are forced to acknowledge the frequent intervention of a Supreme Being who seemed to hold the little community in the hollow of His hand, interposing His grace and mercy between them and their ever present perils, as if they were indeed His chosen few. Again and again they were in direct extremity, in danger of utter extermination by famine or massacre, when help came unexpectedly through what seems more than chance happenings even to sceptics, and which the recipients gratefully acknowledged as heaven-sent relief.

In Colonial times it still remained the custom to observe special days of thanksgiving. Under our present government, a day of thanksgiving was appointed by President Washington at the request of Congress, the occasion being the adoption of the Constitution of the United States. At the close of the War of 1812, President Madison, also at the request of Congress, announced a day of thanksgiving for the return of peace.

Since the war it has become an established custom that the last Thursday in November shall be observed as a general Thanksgiving Day throughout the federation of States.—Marblehead Messenger.

Thanksgiving.

Twelve months are sped—we look behind
And call God's goodness fresh to mind,
His care was felt through storm and shine;
With grateful hearts we seek His shrine,
And humbly kneeling there we say
Our orisons Thanksgiving day:
"For desolation's track untrod,
Our thanks are Thine, Almighty God.

"For seasons fruitful, gifts of love
For joy renewed, for grace above
Our poor desert, thanks unto Thee.
Through sorrow, death and misery—
Whate'er our lot—or good or ill—
Thou'st been our source of comfort still.
Though we have known the chastening rod,
Thy mercies have been sure, O God.

"In days to come, help us to be Concerned about Thy ministry.
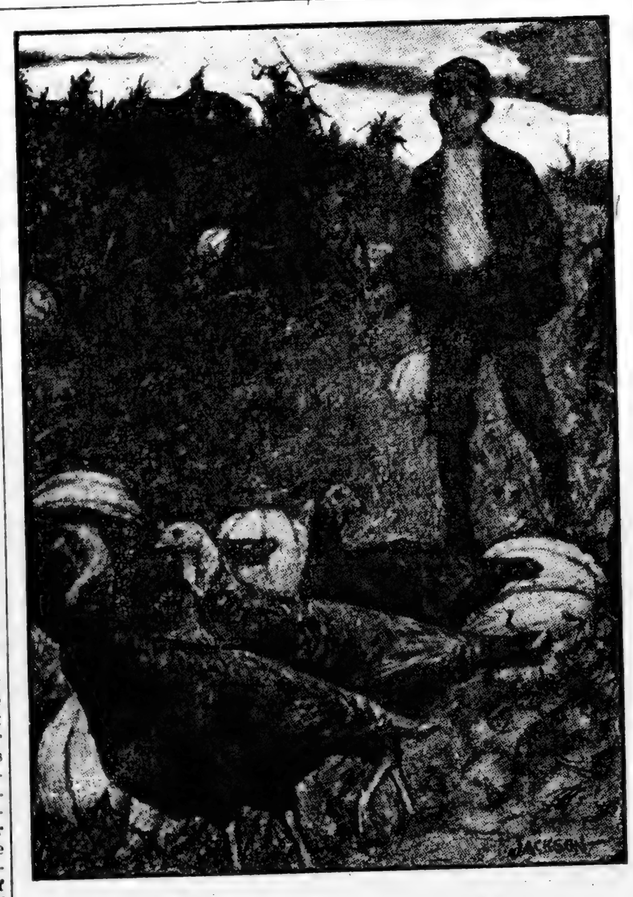
Since 'wrong is wrong and right is right'
Thy strength we need, we need Thy might.
Help us to walk by heaven's light—
Help us to live as in Thy sight.
O Lord! secure in Thee we rest
Use us as seemeth to Thee best."
—Thomas E. Smiley, in Indianapolis News.

Cranberry Jelly.

Add one cup of water to one cup of cranberries and cook until the fruit is quite soft; strain through a jelly bag, add one pound of granulated sugar, boil fifteen minutes longer and set in a cold place until firm. This may be poured into a fancy mold or into dainty individual molds. For the latter egg cups do very nicely. A shallow square or oblong enameled pan is also very nice for molding cranberry jelly, as it may then be easily cut into blocks and piled log cabin fashion on a glass plate. The rich ruby translucent squares form a beautiful color note on the Thanksgiving table.



As Yellow as Gold

By Mary E. Knowlton

Here's a pumpkin, fluted, golden,
Written o'er with customs olden
Out of bygone days.
Cinderella's ancient glory,
Sung in song and told in story,
Suits its yellow blaze.

Tables at the first Thanksgiving,
When colonial dames were living,
Shewed its golden cheer.
Still it smiles a friendly greeting
At the happy family meeting
On the feast-day dear.

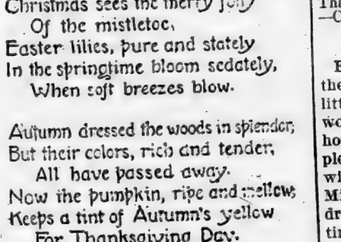
Christmas rooms are gay with holly,
Christmas sees the merry folly
Of the mistletoe.
Easter lilies, pure and stately
In the springtime bloom sedately,
When soft breezes blow.

Autumn dressed the woods in splendor,
But their colors, rich and tender,
All have passed away.
Now the pumpkin, ripe and mellow,
Keeps a tint of Autumn's yellow
For Thanksgiving Day.

The Nightmare.

It was Thanksgiving night, and up in his room,
Our boy lay asleep in his bed,
While dreams of a most uncomfortable kind
Were chasing about in his head.

Along about midnight his mother awoke—
She thought she heard Fred groan—
And then he explained that he was the one,
And told his dream with a moan:



THE DREAM.

"A four-legged turkey as big as a calf
Was roosting right here on my bed,
And just as I woke the critter had said
He'd come there to bite off my head."

There's a moral, of course—there always is one—
And this is a good one, I'm thinking:
Either don't go to bed after eating too much,
Or be careful in eating and drinking.

Thanksgiving Day Entertainment.

Thanksgiving Day brings with it worries for the housewife as to how to make the dinner a success. Friends from out of town are invited, and everything should pass off satisfactorily. It is none too soon to be planning table decorations, especially if the clever brains and fingers do not want a wild rush at the last minute.

From the very best linen down to the place cards and centre decorations, all must be inspected and provided. To the woman who has deft fingers with the paint brush, all sorts of possibilities loom forth for original work, while the shops are replete with novelties. Place cards can be had in the shape of miniature pigs. Others are turkeys and geese. Some of these are hand-painted and are very effective.

To cause some amusement it is an excellent idea to take the initial of each person's name, and with these as initial letters write a phrase descriptive of the person who is to occupy that place. Thus, if a man's initials are E. M., and his hobby is well known to his hostess, he might find a card on which is written "Everlasting Music." A girl's initials may be, for instance, A. L. F., and, amid much laughter, she might be forced to accept a phrase marked, "Arrant Little Flirt," and so on all around the table until each person finds, or is assisted in finding, his or her place.

A good way of initial treatment is to write verses, each line to begin with one initial of the victim's name.

A pretty idea is for each guest to write a Thanksgiving sentiment, or a cause for thankfulness, on a slip of paper. These are collected in a bowl and drawn forth and read one at a time, while everyone tries to discover the author.

As a centrepiece for the table, a large basket of chrysanthemums is effective. Yellow and red are the colors for the decorations.

An Old-Time Thanksgiving.

Patience Deliverance Hopeful Ann,
A gray little prim little Puritan,
Who lived in the years that are far away,
Sat down to her dinner Thanksgiving day.

Turkey and goose, and a pumpkin pie,
A little roast pig with a chestnut eye,
Pudding and apples, and good brown bread,
"I feel very hungry," Deliverance said.

Patience Deliverance Hopeful Ann—
She ate and ate, when she once began,
Turkey and goose and the chestnut pig,
And slices of pie that were much too big,

Till, grandmamma says, she was just like me,
They put her to bed with thoroughwort tea,
Patience Deliverance Hopeful Ann,
That gray little prim little Puritan.

Thanksgiving and the Children.

Encourage the children to help in the Thanksgiving preparations; the little ones love to be busy, and will work cheerfully if they are only shown how. Let them at least pare the apples and stone the raisins, and they will feel a proprietorship in the feast. Midday dinners are best when the children participate, and leave plenty of time afterwards for the games, which even the Pilgrim Fathers did not disdain.

If stories are to be told in the twilight, plenty of the most interesting material can be found in the "Chronicles of the Pilgrims," by Alexander Young. All children like Mrs. Hemans' poems, "Landing of the Pilgrim Fathers." The stern endurance of the Plymouth colony is a fascinating subject.

The day should close with merry-making and fun, but the deeper lessons that it brings must not be forgotten. Gratitude is not a characteristic of childhood, which accepts what is done for it as a right, but even the very little ones can be told in simple language the meaning of the day, and that true thankfulness should prompt us to share our blessings with others. The blessedness of giving is in itself a wonderful education.

Grace For Thanksgiving.

For all Thy care and loving kindness, Lord,
Accept our thanks who gather round this board.
We see Thy goodness in each perfect thing:
The sky, the sea, the bird on happy wing,
And every blade that makes the velvet sward.

With hearts and lips in worshipful accord
Do we recount the blessings on us poured,
And lift our voices hymns of praise to sing,
For all Thy care.

Help us to help the needy and ignored;
Teach us mere riches no true peace afford,
And grant to each that he may often bring
Some consciousness to Thee of laboring
To prove, O Guardian! a worthy ward,
For all Thy care.

Much depends on the particular provisions of the law under which the dispensary is operated. The details of a dispensary statute are quite important. A dispensary established under a bad ill-considered law may come into disrepute that men will call for its removal. That the dispensary should bring revenue seems to be necessary. Towns that derive a large income from liquor licenses will not generally consent to give up the license system unless they get some compensation for the loss of fees from license. While the revenue feature cannot be ignored, it should be incidental and subordinate. The main object of a dispensary system should be the promotion of temperance.

Now, if the establishment of dispensaries is to meet with opposition and if dispensaries may be of different kinds and produce different results, it is manifest that the ... people should actively support candidates who advocate the system or advocate it as a measure for promoting temperance. It may be noted that saloons generally do some work for governors, presidents of the senate, speakers of the house, members of the legislature and even legislative committees are to be elected or appointed. Saloons are watchful and alert. The experience of the committee illustrates the necessity for caution in the selection of senators and members of the house. In the last house of representatives we enacted a bill and introduced which provided for an election in certain counties as to the establishment of dispensaries. The bill did not undertake to establish in any county a single dispensary. It required that there should be an election on the subject and declared the result of the election. The election was to be held in counties, and the result in one county was not to affect the result in any other county.

This was the substance of the bill and this was all. In the usual course the bill was referred to the temperance committee of the house. The committee declined to make a favorable report on the bill and thereby prevented the taking of a vote in the house. We then proposed to amend the bill so that the election could not be held unless it was formally called for by a certain percentage of the registered voters of the several counties. But even this proposition was not sufficient to get the bill out of the hands of the committee. It is plain that if the dispensary forces wish to do their best at the next meeting of the legislature they should keep their eyes wide open when they come to vote in the next primaries. We request you to note the character, habits, affiliations and pretentions of the candidates, especially candidates for governor and the legislature. We suggest that the friends of the dispensary system vote for no aspirant to a law making office who is committed against the dispensary. We further suggest that you support candidates who appear to be

Dispensary Committee To People of Alabama

The following address to the voters of Alabama has been issued by the state dispensary executive committee:

To the voters of Alabama:

The time has come for you to consider the character and views of the men whom you may wish to be your next law makers. Those who may be called at the coming election to fill legislative positions will hold office for four years, and during all that period there will be no opportunity to make new laws or to correct mistakes in those that have already been passed. It is important, therefore, that in matters pertaining to serious legislation the people should be careful and discreet. The question as to the best method of controlling or reducing the liquor traffic has been prominent in Alabama for many years, and it is evident that the dispensary system will occupy much of the time and thought of the next legislature.

Of course, the saloons will be opposed to their own removal. Financial considerations will prompt them to make a strong fight. Temperance people realize that the saloons are always keenly alive to conditions that affect their pecuniary interest, and we may well apprehend that they will make a quiet but active opposition to candidates who favor the dispensary system. The particular provisions of dispensary bills that may be introduced in the next legislature can not now be foreseen. Bills may be introduced looking to the establishment of dispensaries all over the state outside of territory now covered by dispensaries or prohibition, or to the establishment of dispensaries by the vote of different counties, or to the discretionary establishment of dispensaries in designated localities. But the establishment or location of dispensaries is not the only dispensary question. The real nature of the institution to be established, its power and prohibitions, should also be carefully considered. We should bear in mind that there may be all sorts of dispensaries producing varying results. Some dispensaries are undoubtedly a great aid to temperance. Some aid the cause in a less degree. Others may aid it still less, and bills establishing dispensaries might be so drawn that the dispensaries when established would be but little better, though never worse than a gilded saloon. Much depends on the particular provisions of the law under which the dispensary is operated. The details of a dispensary system are quite important. A dispensary established under a bad or ill-considered law may come into such disrepute that men will call for its removal. That the dispensary should bring revenue seems to be necessary. While the revenue feature cannot be ignored, it should be incidental and subordinate. The main object of the dispensary system should be the promotion of temperance.

Now, if the establishment of dispensaries is to meet with opposition, and if dispensaries may be of different kinds and produce different results, it is manifest that temperance people should actively support candidates who advocate the system, and advocate it as a measure for producing temperance. It may be noted that saloons generally do some work when governors, presidents of the senate, speakers of the house, members of the legislature and even legislative committees are to be elected or appointed. Saloons are watchful and active. The experience of the committee illustrates the necessity for care in the selection of senators and members of the house. In the last house of representatives we secured a bill to be introduced which provided for an election in certain counties as to the establishment of dispensaries. The bill did not undertake to establish directly a single dispensary. It required that there should be an election on the subject and declared the result of the election. The election was to be by counties, and the result in one county was not to affect the result in another county.

This was the substance of the bill, and this was all. In the usual course the bill was referred to the temperance committee of the house. The committee declined to make a favorable report on the bill and thus prevented the taking of a vote in the house. We then proposed to amend the bill so that the election could not be held unless it was formally asked for by a certain percentage of the registered voters of the several counties. But even this proposition was not sufficient to get the bill out of the hands of the committee. It is plain that if the dispensary people wish to do their best at the next meeting of the legislature they should keep their eyes wide open when they come to vote in the next primaries. We request you to note the character, record, habits, affiliations and present intentions of the candidates, especially candidates for governor and the legislature. We suggest that the friends of the dispensary system vote for no aspirant to a law making office who is committed against the dispensary. We further suggest that you see that candidates who appear to be uncommitted, are not secretly pledged to oppose the dispensary system. If, in your judgment, the dispensary affords to young men relief from temptation, helps the old to drink with less frequency, elevates manhood and improves the general conditions of living, we ask you to give it your active influence both before and after the next primary election.

We expect to publish before long a substantial copy or synopsis of the bill which we will present to the next legislature.

Very respectfully,

Frank S. Moody, chairman from state at large; James E. Webb, from state at large; John E. Mitchell, from first congressional district; J. P. Wood, from second congressional district; L. B. Musgrove, from sixth congressional district; G. A. Joiner, from fourth congressional district; A. P. Fuqua, from fifth congressional district; W. G. Foreman, from seventh congressional district; F. T. Petty, from eighth congressional district; T. M. Davidson, from ninth congressional district, state dispensary executive committee.

One giant battleship of to-day such as made junk of a large part of the Russian fleet in the Battle of the Sea of Japan could destroy both the fleets engaged in the most picturesque and in many respects most memorable naval battle of history--that of Trafalgar—and come out of the contest without even the paint knocked from its armored sides. A vessel that can pour in a deadly fire at a distance of from three to five miles was probably not even dreamed of or desired by Nelson. He liked to close with the enemy and do real fighting, hand to hand, if necessary.

Two large manufacturers of proprietary medicines have sued one of the large Eastern magazines for libel, on account of the publication of articles reflecting on the preparations manufactured, none of which are advertised in the magazine sued. In one case a proprietary medicine manufacturer was charged with having forged a "testimonial" as to the merit of his remedy. In his suit he claims to have the original of the letter in question. The suit will probably develop the fact that all the "patent" medicine testimonials are genuine and that most of them are unsolicited.

Agent George W. Parker, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, takes distinct issue with President Roosevelt on the question of race suicide in his annual report. In commenting on the large number of children found among families little able to support and care for them, he declares that he meets with many cases in the course of his work where race suicide would be a decided advantage. He believes something should be done to protect society from the dangerous increase in families where there is no prospect of ever being able to properly train and care for the progeny.

A jury in Seattle has decided that a dog has a right to bite a man in self-defense, relates the Portland (Ore.) Telegram. This is an interesting verdict. It appears that a dog bit a piece out of a man's leg, and the victim sued the owner of the dog for $10,000. The defense was that the dog would never have bitten the man if he had not been provoked to do so, and that as he was provoked to do so the dog was standing quite within his rights in biting the man. The defense was upheld, and dog and owner alike ought to be happy. Many other cases of a similar nature have been brought before, but this case is said to be the first time that the jury has taken this point of view.

RAILROAD EMPLOYEES ALERT.

Are Making Strong Fight Against Adoption of Esch-Townsend Bill.

Washington, Nov. 19.—That the railroad employees of the country mean to throw their whole weight against the adoption by congress of the Esch-Townsend bill or similar rate-fixing legislation is indicated by the great number of protests that have been coming to the senate committee on interstate commerce recently and that still continue to flow in by every mail. When the committee meets on Tuesday it will be confronted by a formidable array of these protests in the form of resolutions by local divisions of the railway labor organizations in all parts of the country and letters from local officers and division chiefs.

Not only have the national organizations of the leading orders, such as brotherhoods of engineers, firemen and trainmen and the order of conductors, taken action which has been placed before the senate committee, but hundreds of local divisions have re-enforced this action by resolutions of their own. While the expressions of sentiment that have reached the senate committee have not yet been tabulated, there are some five or six hundred local divisions of railway workmen represented in this way, and all the expressions that have been received strongly oppose any legislation giving to any governmental body the power to name rates. In some states nearly all the local lodges have taken such action. In New York, for example, thirty-seven of the forty divisions of the brotherhood of locomotive engineers have protested against the proposed legislation.

The other protests received include many from divisions of the engineers, firemen, conductors, trainmen, telegraphers, baggagemen and trackmen in different parts of the country. The railroad workmen claim that with those dependent upon them they represent six million persons who are vitally concerned in opposing the passage of any such measure as the Esch-Townsend bill.

Although the movement has only been called to public attention during the past week by the visit of the committee of railway employees at the white house, opposition to the Esch-Townsend bill apparently has been gathering force among the workingmen ever since the measure was framed.

The initial action was taken at the convention of the brotherhood of locomotive engineers at Los Angeles, California, in May, 1904, even before the Esch-Townsend bill had become a fact. At this time this body voted that government interference with the railroads would be detrimental in their opinion, to the interests of the railroad companies, the railroad employes and the country at large.

At a special meeting of the division chiefs of this order at Cleveland, Ohio, January 21 and 23 of the present year, a resolution was passed to the effect "that this representative body is opposed to placing the power in the hands of the interstate commerce commission, regulating the rates for transportation on railways." Twenty-eight division chiefs of the order attested the minutes of the meeting containing this expression of opinion and their statement is now before the senate committee.

The brotherhood of locomotive firemen, at the meeting of its executive committee at Peoria, Ill., last February, following the example of the engineers, took similar action. They were followed by the order of railway conductors, assembled at Portland, Oregon, and the brotherhood of railway trainmen who met at Buffalo last May. The representatives of the order of railroad telegraphers in the east have also committed themselves in condemnation of the bill.

Typical of the stand taken by these various organizations are the resolutions adopted by the order of railway trainmen, with a membership of 80,000, at their national convention at Buffalo last spring. In this memorial the trainmen said:

"The usual acceptance of the term 'rate regulation' is rate reduction. The real issue, then, of rate regulation is one of rate reduction, which means a loss of revenue to the railway companies, and just how far-reaching this loss would be is a matter of conjecture. This organization does not stand as an apologist for railway wrong-doing, nor as a champion of railway corporations as against the rights and interests of the general public. Practices of discrimination are not condoned, but there is a remedy for them within the present law. We believe the laws should be forced against discrimination, rebates and preferentials, thus ensuring fair treatment to all concerned, but we do not believe in empowering any commission with the power to make a rate. As railway employes, we feel that the railway companies must be protected from oppression, and unfair legislation and be allowed to manage their business to the end that good service and wages be maintained, and a fair profit on railway investments be assured."

In the majority of these resolutions from labor organizations stress is laid on the point that they express the independent opinion of the men themselves, that they are subject to no coercion and that their action is taken because they believe it to be for their own good, and that of those dependent upon them, and the public at large. In this connection they emphasize the opinion that should a law like the Esch-Townsend bill be enforced, it would deprive the railroads of the control of their income, cause a shrinkage in the values of railroad property and thus result in great injury not only to themselves, but to the general public, impairing the commerce and industries of the whole country.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR DECEMBER 3.

Subject: Nehemiah Rebuilds the Walls of Jerusalem, Neh. iv., 7-20—Golden Text, Matt. xxvi., 41—Memory Verses, 19, 20—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. A conspiracy (vs. 7, 8).

7. "Sanballat." An officer of the Persian Government, holding a military command at Samaria. He was a native of the land of Moab; therefore his hatred to the Jews. "Tobiah." A descendant of the hated race of Ammonites. "Arabians." Headed probably by Geshem, and in league with the Samaritans against the Jews. Read 6:6. The building of the wall was construed into a design to fortify themselves and then revolt and become an independent State. "Ashdodites." Inhabitants of Ashdod, one of the great cities of the Philistine plain. 8. "Conspired." The enemies of the Jews were so bitterly opposed to the rebuilding of the walls that they employed every form of opposition in their power.

II. Praying and watching (vs. 9-11). 9. "Nevertheless." Notwithstanding the conspiracy and all other discouragements. "Made our prayer." Nehemiah was conscious that he was working according to God's will, and he knew the source of power. "Set a watch." Opposite to the place where they were encamped, probably on the north side of the city. Faith and works go together. Watching and praying, weak when apart, a Gibraltar of strength when united. 10. "Judah said." That is, the returned captives, most of whom were of the tribe of Judah. This verse expresses the despair of the little nation. Many of the people had no heart for the work; some of the nobles were in correspondence with the enemies (6:17-19). Even the high priest had relationship with hostile foreigners (Ammonites—Tobiah and his son married Jewish women), and gave them favors (13:4, 5, 28). "Strength—decayed." From the extent of the work, the fewness of the laborers, and the exhaustion of their physical powers they seemed unable to complete their task. "Not able." Their statements were probably correct, but their conclusion was wrong. They were able to build the wall, and they did it. 11. "Adversaries said." In this verse Nehemiah condenses the hostile utterances of their enemies. This would cause a constant and disheartening fear.

III. Precautions taken (vs. 12-14). 12. "Jews which dwelt by them." Those who dwelt among the Samaritans and other enemies and found out their evil designs. They were anxious to have their friends and kinsmen return to their homes and families. "Ten times." Equivalent to "again and again." "Ye must return" (R. V.) Leave the work and go home because of the threatened danger. 13. "Lower places." Within the wall where it was not yet raised to its due height, and therefore most liable to the enemies' assault. "Higher places." Where the wall was finished and towers were set from whence they might shoot arrows or throw stones. This would show the enemy that they were fully prepared for their intended assault and would give notice that their secret plan was known. "After their families." In family groups, so that the men that guarded the wall had their kinsmen nearest them. Thus the soldiers need not be distracted by anxiety for their families, for those whom they desired to defend were at hand. 14. "Be not ye afraid." The pagan allies had joined their forces; their army was advancing and doubtless in sight, and an attack impending, when Nehemiah made this short, stirring appeal. No conflict followed, for the enemy saw from a distance that the whole people awaited them in perfect order and equipment; so they lost heart and turned back. "Remember the Lord." The best of all arguments for patriotic courage.

IV. Working and watching (vs. 15-20). 15. "We returned, all of us, to the wall." Noble persistence in a good purpose. The momentary withdrawal from the work to be ready for the Lord's battle had neither changed their purpose nor dampened their ardor.

16. "My servants." Probably a special band of men given as personal guards, by either the King of Persia or the people at Jerusalem. "Half—wrought—half—held." This is no unusual thing, even in the present day in Palestine; people sowing their seed are often attended by an armed man, to prevent the Arabs from robbing them of their seed, which they will not fail to do if not protected. "Habergeons." An old English word for coat-of-mail, from "halo" (neck) and "bergen" (to protect). "Rulers—behind." The chiefs stood behind the laborers stationed at different places along the wall, directing and encouraging them, ready to lead on the armed force if an attack was made upon the laborers.

17. "They which builded." Masons, bricklayers and the like. "They that bare burdens." The carriers of material. 18. "That sounded the trumpet." The workmen labored with a trowel in one hand and a sword in the other; and as they were far removed from each other, Nehemiah, who was night and day on the spot, kept a trumpeter by his side, so that on any intelligence of a surprise being brought to him an alarm might be immediately sounded and assistance rendered to the most distant detachment of their brethren.

19, 20. "And I said," etc. By these vigilant precautions the counsels of the enemy were defeated and the work was carried on. God, when He has important public work to do, never fails to raise up instruments for accomplishing it. The work was completed in the brief time of fifty-two days (6:15), ending the last of September. The walls must have been three or four miles long to reach around the city.

Mr. Garfield gave this pledge, it is stated, and the packers allowed him to study their business in all its details from the inside.

Now, it is announced, the results of his study have been turned over to the Government department of justice to be employed in legal prosecution of the packers.

Commissioner Garfield would not have ventured to give the pledge that was demanded by the packers without instructions from Washington. He pledged, not his own word, but the Government's. It is not his good faith, but the Government's, that is in question now.

The Journal has no concern for the packers, except as they are citizens of Chicago. If it can be proved that they are guilty of engaging in a conspiracy in restraint of trade, they ought to be punished.

But their guilt, if they are guilty, must be fairly proved. They must be given a square deal.

Since the Government has elevated its vision to such a height as to overlook the nest of defiant criminal trusts almost within the shadow of the capitol dome, in order to fasten itself a thousand miles away upon Chicago, the Government and the President cannot be too careful to avoid suspicion that they are more anxious to prosecute Western offenders than offenders in the East.

Some of the methods already employed in this case have not been particularly distinguished for decency. When the Government enters a man's house and takes his private papers, when it drags the wives of packing house employes into court and puts them under heavy bonds, it is hardly dignified, not to say honorable, nor even respectable.

A NEAT BOOKLET.

"Birmingham Today and Tomorrow" is the title of a very neat little booklet issued by the Birmingham Realty Company. It is full of interesting facts about Birmingham and its many industries. The Birmingham merchants have been slow in reaching for the trade that they ought to do with central Alabama. They have neglected the mail order trade which would bring them in many thousands of dollars in the course of the year. This booklet will be sent postpaid to any one on application.

A UNION LETTER.

"Guin, Ala., Nov. 24, '05.

Mr. W. J. Watson,
Clanton, Ala.

Dear Brother:

I wrote you yesterday regarding your order, but didn't say anything about your invitation to me to visit Chilton County Union. I certainly do appreciate your invitation and it would give me great pleasure to be with you all at your county meeting. I'll be at Texarkana, Texas, at that time, attending the meeting of the Business Agents of the various state unions. I hope to be in the organization of the National Union also, if we are not too busy with our own affairs at that time. This is going to be one of the most important meetings ever held by farmers, for the simple reason it will be a strictly farmers' meeting. Hoping to meet you some time in the near future, I am yours for success.

P. F. PARKER,
State Bus. Agent for Alabama.

ATTENTION!

Public road apportioners, overseers, and all citizens interested in improving the condition of our public roads are specially requested to come to Clanton on Dec. 9, 1905, where there will be a demonstration of the use of the SPLIT LOG DRAG method of working roads by Col. Thornton, of Talladega.

Col. Thornton is a farmer of ability and one who gives much of his time for the improvement of the industries, conditions, etc., of our great commonwealth. Joseph E. Wing, of the Breeders' Gazette, said "That Col. Thornton gave the best demonstration of how to lay a tile underdrain, and made the best lecture upon the use and use of tile drains that I have ever heard."

Come one, come all.

J. N. DENNIS,
U. S. Public Roads Correspondent.

DISPENSARY?

In this paper our readers will find an address on the Dispensary issue. Read it and ponder over it, there is no use shirking the subject, every one who has thought of or studied over the liquor question, knows that "Prohibition does not prohibit." Then why not regulate the sale and thus keep the necessary supervision on the traffic thereby the illegal dealings in liquor and its attendant crop of perjury and drunkenness. Read the address.

THORSBY LETTER.

Miss Rosa Carden, of Shelby, is visiting Mr. Raspberry. Miss Della Wambem arrived last week. She will teach in the Mullins Hill school. T. F. Thorson arrived last Wednesday personally conducting a party of 14 from Pennsylvania. The King family have taken the Kiraby house and Miss Lucas is staying with the Misses Hovey. Nim Turner arived in Thorsby last week. We are all glad to see him back. The Norwegian Ladies' Aid Society met with Mrs. Lefstad on the 16th. The Anderson family have returned to their home in Chicago after a three weeks' visit here. Rev. Hartelius is in Fruithurst. Mr. Feast made a busines trip to Birmingham Saturday. Mr. and Mrs. J. Bice went to Shelby Wednesday to attend a wedding there. Miss Anna Howard and Mr. G. W. Phalin went to Birmingham Saturday and got married. Everybody extends their heartiest congratulations to the happy pair and they are being "feted" and serenaded on every hand.

NEMO.

PHALIN-HOWARD.

Mr. G. W. Phalin and Miss Anna Howard were married in Birmingham Saturday afternoon, Nov. 25, by the Rev. Father Coyle. While the friends of the young people anticipated their union, yet at the last they were all taken by surprise. The groom is a prominent business man in Thorsby, having been a member of the Denison Lumber Co. since its installation in Thorsby, but we hear that he is now heavily interested in a brick plant at Decatur. The bride is the daughter of S. Howard, of Thorsby, and is a remarkably bright, intelligent young lady, very popular among her large circle of friends. THE UNION extends its heartiest congratulations to the happy pair. May THEIR UNION be long and prosperous is our sincere wish.

CALERA.

The Land and Improvement Co. has sold ground for a grist mill and cotton gin plant to be built at once. Arthur Sanders' new house is ready for the painter, and this new residence will add greatly to the appearance of Church street. Mrs. R. Pilgreen has repaired her house on Montgomery avenue and Mrs. Francis is having her residence repainted. Holcombe & Bowden have painted the warehouse. The ladies of the Baptist and Methodist churches have each given suppers lately and realized a nice amount for their churches. Mr. Nabors, employed by the Southern railroad, was caught under the cars a few days ago and had both legs cut off and otherwise badly cut up. David Mullins, of Chilton Co., has bought the home of Asberry Leonard situated 4 miles north of Calera. Mr. Mullins is an enterprising truck farmer, and will no doubt make a good thing out of his investment. We dislike to lose Mr. Leonard, but we are glad to gain Mr. Mullins. Calera's new postoffice in the Wade Block is now complete, and Mr. Pilgreen, our excellent postmaster, is awaiting orders from Washington to move in. When this move is made Calera will then have the neatest and most convenient postoffice in this part of Alabama.

VETERAN.

RANDOLPH.

Health of this community good. How we welcome the UNION with its interesting correspondence. Business is lively. Republicanism does the whole country good. We believe the people know it. Republican prosperity makes the farmer cheerful, makes our young people energetic and hopeful, enables people to pay their debts, and to furnish and beautify their homes. The last few years proves all of this, and the people know it. S. P. Franklin and C. C. Crumpton, of Pleasant Grove, were welcome visitors last week. Thomas Cost, of Pleasant Grove, was in town last week. J. C. C. Wooley, of Lawley, was in town last week. Dolphus Mann visited friends near Kalona last week. Miss Selma Patterson and Miss Rena Wright, two of Pleasant Grove's most charming young ladies, were in town Monday visiting Mrs. Jones. Sutton Smitherman, of Briarfield, is moving to the J. M. Davis place a short distance northwest of town. Mr. and Mrs. McKerrall went to Maplesville Sunday. J. D. Wright, one of the wide-awake, thinking young men of Pleasant Grove, was in town Monday. Mrs. Dock Mahan, of Oakley, who has been with her daughter, Mrs. Hubbard, for several days, returned home Sunday. Dr. Morgan Wooley, of Atlanta, who has been visiting his parents here, returned home Sunday.

Mrs. Splawn, of Oakley, is visiting her sister, Mrs. Hubbard. Presiding Elder Abernathy was here Monday. In our last communication we had something to say in regard to self-sacrifice, and we have recently learned of a young lady friend who will soon enter a Bible training school and then will go as a missionary to Japan to remain there probably as long as life lasts or until Jesus comes. Noble young lady, oh what self-sacrifice to thus leave the homeland with its pleasures to give her life for the Japanese people, to go depending only on divine power to supply all her needs. Oh, how denominationalism and pet theories sink into oblivion before such a noble life. All others are equally praiseworthy who are sacrificing reputation, time, dress, money and influence for the benefit of humanity, though they may not be known only a limited distance.

"Then heed not the cold winds
Nor storms that may blow;
The harvest is nearing,
We reap what we sow."
Adieu for the present.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

BETH SALEM.

We are sory to say that R. N. Wilkins' wife is sick; also J. H. Moore, our mill man, is down with bilious fever. We hope for a speedy recovery for both. The Farmers' Union here is in full force. Our school is doing well under the skilful management of Miss Julia Parrish. J. T. Anderson visited G. W. Gray's. W. J. Vinson and wife were visitors at Geo. Bruce's Saturday. G. W. Gray has sold his place to Rev. J. E. Moore. We regret to lose so good a neighbor. One more month will wind up the year 1905. May we all live so that we can look back and say we are that much nearer heaven.

ONE WHO TRIES.

ROCKY MOUNT.

Health of this community is very good. Farmers are done gathering and district 57 is going to build a new school house. The people will meet Friday night and pay over the money. Our Farmers' Union is growing every meeting day, which is on the Saturday before the 2nd and 4th Sunday. Come on, boys, let's have the best Union in the county. Mr. Editor, tell "Just a Voter" to come every week, for as soon as I get hold of my UNION I look for him.

HILL BILLY.

MARS HILL.

All are done gathering, and are now planning out their crops for next year. There are many fat hogs in the pens waiting for cooler weather. It's mighty nice to go to your own pen and take out a hog instead of going to town after meat. Monroe Scott is preparing to move to Bibb county, near Active. J. A. Langston has moved to Bibb, but as he is a UNION man, we expect he'll visit us quite often. A man told me that he received a letter from John Terry, who lives in Texas, and Mr. Terry said to tell "Dad's Plow Boy" that if he lived in Texas he'd vote for stock law. That may be so, but I think if Mr. Terry lived where I do he'd be with me. C. L. Langston is working on his new house. Mrs. Mattie Johnson will move to her home place soon. Messrs. J. N. and C. W. Scott went to Clanton Wednesday on business. J. N. Scott sold cotton in Montevallo Thursday for 10.80 and went to Birmingham on business Friday. Joseph Headley and wife were visitors to our singing Sunday evening. Well, travel over the big hill has stopped; it did not surprise me. You know I've been telling the Judge to look out. Columbus W. Scott went to Clanton Wednesday and on his return home took his "intended" out of school and went to Jemison, where they were married by 'Squire Langston at W. B. Scott's house. The happy couple took a trip over in Bibb to see his uncle, Y. P. Scott. The groom's parents gave a handsome supper in honor of the newly married couple Thursday night which was highly enjoyed by all present. After supper we all had a good singing, with good instrumental music by Will Terry, Tony Cofer, Morgan Scott and others. Everybody looked happy. We all wish the young couple a long, prosperous, and happy life together; and "may their only troubles be little ones."

DAD'S PLOW BOY.

SOUTHERN COTTON ASSOCIATION

Chilton Co. Sub-Division.

To Farmers, Landlords and Tenants:

At the meeting of the executive committee of the S. C. A. at Asheville, N. C., the assessment on every bale of cotton grown by members was placed at 3 cents.

At a meeting of the Chilton Co. association the county ex. committee was empowered to enforce this assessment.

The amount is small, and it is hoped that those even not members will co-operate in raising it.

The association has already added millions to the wealth of our country and the price of cotton would likely now rule at 8 cents but for it. The public ginneries are authorized to collect this 3 cents per bale.

HE'S SO POPULAR.

As sure as there's anything doing—
A picnic, a dinner or ball—
Or if a pink tea is a-brewing,
Reception or afternoon call,
He's there, and he's there with his gall.
He isn't a little bit shy,
He makes a conjunction with each social function.
He's surely a popular guy.

He keeps the sweet damosels busy,
From one to the other he'll flit;
His pace makes the rest of us dizzy,
He's very decidedly "it."
His rags have a beautiful fit,
He wears a round glass in his eye;
Mammas all adore him and bow down before him,
He's surely a popular guy.

He plays the piano quite nicely,
And then he can sing a good song;
That doesn't explain it precisely,
The reason his pull is so strong,
I guess, and I don't think I'm wrong,
It's not that his standing is high
In a waltz or cotillion—he's worth a cool million,
That makes him a popular guy.

Short-Sighted Heroines.

A writer in a magazine points out that no heroine in fiction has been given as yet a pair of eyeglasses. Heroes have even worn spectacles, but the heroine in a pince-nez has still to be created. In real life she is common enough. Who shall say that maidens in eyeglasses are not every whit as likely to inspire passion in the other sex as maidens whose sight is perfect?

For my own part I see no more reason why a heroine should not be as interesting in eyeglasses as a heroine with phthisis; but it would never do to let the hero knock them off as he clasped her to him, nor would it aid the romance of a situation if she had to put on her glasses to determine whether it was he approaching through the avenue.—London World.

TO YOUNG PEOPLE.

We are glad to say that a number of young people in our community have found the love of God precious to their souls, and have stepped into the vineyard to work for the Lord. There they have precious promises all through the word of God. It makes us feel dreadfully sad, though, when we think of how many of our young people are yet unsaved. Some have asked us to pray for them, and some say they will wait till another fall when protracted meetings are held, and then join the church and live better. Remember that you live in a land where death is calling every day, perhaps he may call you before another fall comes round. Many a face we see now will be laid in the cold grave by that time. We can't tell when death will call for us. We can look at our time piece and realize that every time the long hand gets around our death is one hour nearer; and as those hours roll by us never can we call them back. And yet we waste those precious hours in sin and folly, and go on our way to everlasting fire "where the worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched, and there will be weeping and gnashing of teeth."

Agent George W. Parker, of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, takes distinct issue with President Roosevelt on the question of race suicide in his annual report. In commenting on the large number of children found among families little able to support and care for them, he declares that he meets with many cases in the course of his work where race suicide would be a decided advantage. He believes something should be done to protect society from the dangerous increase in families where there is no prospect of ever being able to properly train and care for the progeny.

A jury in Seattle has decided that a dog has a right to bite a man in self-defense, relates the Portland (Ore.) Telegram. This is an interesting verdict. It appears that a dog bit a piece out of a man's leg, and the victim sued the owner of the dog for $10,000. The defense was that the dog would never have bitten the man if he had not been provoked to do so, and that as he was provoked to do so the dog was standing quite within his rights in biting the man. The defense was upheld, and dog and owner alike ought to be happy. Many other cases of a similar nature have been brought before, but this case is said to be the first time that the jury has taken this point of view.

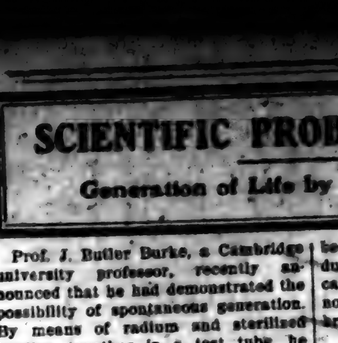
SCIENTIFIC PROBLEM SOLVED

Generation of Life by Artificial Means.

Prof. J. Butler Burke, a Cambridge university professor, recently announced that he had demonstrated the possibility of spontaneous generation. By means of radium and sterilized boullon together in a test tube, he claimed to have obtained cultures presenting many appearances of vitality, such as growth and subdivision. Prof. Burke conducted experiments for six years in the Cavendish laboratory, with Prof. Thomson.

These experiments, together with those of Prof. Loeb of San Francisco, in the opinion of many scientists, have done much to solve the oldest scientific problem in the world—the generation of life by artificial means. Loeb, some months ago, startled the scientific world by actually fertilizing the eggs of sea urchin and thus generating life artificially. Now he declares to have made another important step toward an explanation of the process of reproduction in animal life. He claims to have found a reason for the appearance of the "fertilization membrane," which becomes visible around the sea urchin and starfish after they have been penetrated by the active element.



THE FIRST STAGE OF LIFE — WITHOUT DEFINITE FORM

Prof. Loeb, when he began his investigations on sea urchin eggs, realized that one constant accompaniment of its normal development was the formation of a delicate, transparent membrane about the egg. This membrane appeared with such rapidity as to seem literally to jump away from the egg surface. The space between the membrane and the egg surface always was filled with transparent fluid.

Soon after the formation of the membrane the egg would divide into halves, each of which would divide a little later into two others. The development proceeds in this way by cell division, the process being initiated by the entrance of the active element.

At the beginning of his attempts to solve the mystery of fertilization Dr. Loeb was convinced that he must discover some means of imitating the essential details of the process by physico-chemical methods. Since the membrane formation appeared to be one of those essential details it became, first of all, necessary to produce the membrane by physico-chemical means so perfectly that it could not be distinguished from the membrane normally produced.

This was accomplished at length

with great success on the sea urchin egg in simple fashion. Unfertilized eggs were treated with a solution of acetyc, butryic or other similar acids, followed usually by solutions of common salt.

Benzol, amylene and other chemicals of this character acted similarly. Would they produce the membrane on the starfish egg also? Since, under appropriate conditions Dr. Loeb was able to fertilize sea urchin eggs with the active elements of starfish, producing thereby a hitherto impossible hybrid, it seemed to him that the latter must carry into the egg substances similar to those carried in by the active element of the urchin.

He was not long in showing conclusively that the same substances which produce the fertilization membrane artificially in the urchin's egg act similarly on the starfish egg. In some cases starfish eggs would develop when no membrane had been formed. Their development, however, was abnormally slow and imperfect.

The facts pointed to the inevitable conclusion that the membrane formation, or the process underlying it, was a necessary accompaniment of normal development, the membrane itself merely resulting as a mechanical consequence of the extrusion of its substance from the egg. It appeared to contain a substance which when in the egg prevented its development.

Dr. Loeb found that the presence of oxygen kills unfertilized eggs, but develops those which have been fertilized. The entrance of the active element into the egg in normal fertilization obviously produces a profound change in its internal affairs. Oxidation after fertilization leads to the formation of different chemical products from those formed in the unfertilized but mature egg.

All facts at present indicate that this change is not due to the mere addition of a new chemical substance, but to the fact that this additional substance drives out another.

STEER TROTS FAST HALF MILE.

San Antone Pete a Real Wonder in Harness.

One of the attractions this year on the Western States fair circuits is San Antone Pete, a Cherokee steer, which trots in harness to a sulky and can do his half mile in 2:10¼ with apparent ease and with all the evidences of keen enjoyment displayed by a thoroughbred fighting for his head and impatient of restraint. The animal is owned and driven by Al Dougherty of Logan, Kan., who claims Pete is the only steer ever trained for speed in harness.

Pete belongs to a bovine race now rapidly becoming extinct. A quarter of a century ago Cherokee cattle were famous in the Southwest. The Cherokees differ greatly from the Texas

"long horns," being well set up and famous for horns of remarkable grace and beauty. They closely resemble the Spanish bulls bred solely for fighting purposes, and it is believed by many authorities that the breed sprang from animals imported by Spaniards into Mexico. They were not fitted for the hard life of the range, however, and gave way gradually before the hardy "long horns."

Pete was born near San Antonio, Texas, and is an animal of remarkable beauty. He travels in a special car and is as well cared for as any racehorse. He races almost every day against horses whose owners think they can negotiate the mile while Pete covers the half. The start always is made under the wire, with steer and horse abreast, and thus far Pete has won every race.—New York Press.

FRENCHMAN BUILDS ODD HOME.

Constructed of Stones He Picked Up by the Roadside.

With stones picked up by the roadside during twenty-six years Ferdinand Cheval, a rural postman at Hauterive, Drome, France, has just completed with his own hands the building of a beautiful house. It was the dream of his youth, and he has realized it without the aid of a mason, sculptor or architect. His habit of picking up pieces of stone earned him the reputation of being a "crank," but when the walls of his "palace" began to appear his critics changed their minds. It is a strange and beautiful building. Figures and plants and animals cover the exterior. In all 1,200 cubic yards of stone were used, and the total cost to the postman was only $1,000.

Real Founder of Family.

A visitor to the West cemetery at Litchfield, Conn., found the following interesting inscription on a tombstone there: "Here lies the body of Mary, wife of Dr. John Buel, Esq. She died Nov. 4th, 1768, aet 94, having 13 children, 101 grandchildren, 274 great-grandchildren, 22 great-great-grandchildren—total, 410; 336 survive her."

IN CLOSE QUARTERS IN SHELL.

Flounder and Oyster Occupied the One Domicile.

C. F. Hildenbrand is the possessor of an oyster shell which contained two inhabitants—an oyster and a fish. He has had the curio preserved in alcohol.

The natural and rightful inhabitant of the shell was dwarfed by the presence of the fish, which was a flounder nearly three inches long, it being only about have the size of an oyster ordinarily contained in a shell the size of the one which held the peculiar combination. An oysterman found the strange combination while plying his trade and presented it to Mr. Hildenbrand.

Those who have seen the curio have formed so many ideas of how it all came about that it would be impossible to repeat them all. One of these explanations of how the fish happened in the oyster shell is that it just happened along while the oyster was taking a good breathing spell with its shell open, and that being of a curious disposition the flounder investigated just at the time the shell animal cloosed up for the evening.

MODEST DRUMMER DID IT ALL.

Real Secret of the Signing of the Peace Treaty.

"Gentlemen," said the drummer as he looked around on the group, "I was away in the West on one of my regular trips when I saw by the papers that the peace conference at Portsmouth was likely to fail. I dropped everything and hired a special train and headed for New Hampshire."

"What for?" was innocently asked.

"As soon as I reached Portsmouth," continued the drummer, and treating the inquiry with contempt, "I asked for an interview with Witte and Komura. It was instantly granted. When I stood before the two of them I said:

"'Witte, you must concede everything but an indemnity.'

"'I'll do it, Dan,' says he—'do it for your sake.'

"'And Komura,' says I, 'you must

"I'll do it, Dan," says he, "for your sake."

waive that question on indemnity and give up half the island of Sakhalien.'

"'If you say so, of course,' he answered.

"'Then both of you come out and have a drink with me and let us have peace within the next ten days.'

"That's what I did, gentlemen," said the drummer, as he puffed away at his cigar, "and whenever you see in the papers that the emperor of Germany, King Edward and President Roosevelt had anything to do with the matter you will know the truth. I am not boasting, but simply relating a little incident, and if you gentlemen——"

But they were silent and he had to go out and buy his own drink.

Bet Herself on a Ball Game.

As the result of the loss of a wager, in which the stakes consisted of the promise of her hand in marriage provided the Okolona (Miss.) baseball team defeated her home town's team, Miss Beatrice Jamison, the pretty daughter of Col. A. J. Jamison, postmaster at Houston, is the wife of Joseph S. Williams. They met the first time when Houston's team played the Okolonas recently. They formed an attachment at once, which ripened into a proposal. Both are baseball enthusiasts, and when the Okolona team visited Houston Miss Jamison agreed to the proposition to wager herself that Houston would win. Okolona enjoyed a decisive victory, and the nuptials were performed after the game.

How Pennsylvanian Caught a Heron.

Ezra Swope of Marshlands recently captured alive a large blue heron. He set a fish rod and caught an eel. He pulled the eel out and put it in a small pool, leaving it on the hook, and went further down the stream. When he came back he found that the heron had swallowed the eel and was held fast.—Wellsboro Republican Advocate.

CHINA SENDS BRAIN TWISTER.

Absorbing Puzzle of Ping-Pong and the Saucers.

China, as everybody knows, was the birthplace—or one of the birthplaces, for it had many parents—of the puzzle. Many of our best brain twisters were known to Chinamen thousands of years ago. The following is a fascinating little poser that we picked up in our wanderings in China. It was a favorite recreation of a certain Pong-Ping. The puzzle that he is shown in the illustration to be engaged in solving is simply this: He has placed six saucers or basins of graduated sizes in a pile on one of his four mats, and he wants to transfer the pile to one of the other mats by moving one saucer at a time from mat to mat without ever placing a saucer on one that is smaller than itself. This can be done in seventeen moves if you go about it in the right way. Can you perform the feat? If you can, then try to find the fewest possible moves for removing a pile of ten saucers, and also a pile of thirty-six.

A practical way of trying this puzzle is to use a pile of counters numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, etc., downwards, and never place a counter on another that has a smaller number. When you have found the easy solution for six you will not be satisfied until you have mastered the case of ten. The case of thirty-six is given for the benefit of those readers who like a hard nut to crack.

Solution.

With six saucers, first make a pile of the three smallest (five moves), a pile of the next two (three moves), remove the bottom saucer (one move), replace the two (three moves) and replace the pile of three (five moves)—altogether seventeen moves. With ten saucers you must first make a pile of six (seventeen moves), a pile of three (seven moves) and proceed as before. This will take forty-nine moves. Thirty-six saucers may be removed in 1,793 moves, by making piles of twenty-eight (769 moves) and seven (127 moves).—London Tit-Bits.

Old Mill Now a Church.

It is always interesting to note a building which has been made into a church out of some purely secular structure, and a church which, having outlived its day in a generation, is sold for a purely commercial purpose. It is not often that a church or chapel bears the mark of its previous purpose as the church of St.

Exterior of Heath Mill Church.

Cross of Reigate Heath, England, which was formerly known as Mill Chapel because it had been at one time a mill as the huge arms upon it still show us. It is served by the clergy of the parish church. The chapel stands in a very striking position and can be seen with its great gaunt arms from a long distance.

Boots as "Cribs."

One of the universities has instituted a special inquiry into the remarkable success which attended its students in a recent examination. It leaked out that the students wrote dates and names on their brilliantly polished boots with ordinary black-lead pencils, and by means of holding the feet in a peculiar position the writing was legible to the candidate, though invisible to any one who looked at it from another angle.

Trout Pulled Boy Into Stream.

Edgar Hagar, a 12-year-old New Hampshire boy, was pulled into the Arukee river, in that state, and nearly drowned by a big rainbow trout, which he had hooked. By clinging to a tree which had fallen into the river and at the same time fighting gamely for his prize, the boy finally tired the fish out. It weighed 10 pounds. Hagar weighs 60.

Free to All.

A young Maine couple went for a ride in the country on a recent Sunday. They saw a woman gathering apples in an orchard near the road, and asked if they might have some. "Guess so," was the startling reply, "I'm stealing them."

WAS TELEPHONING TO HEAVEN.

But a Policeman Got Him Before Central Makes Connection.

Astronomers who sought to signal the inhabitants of Mars have been beaten at their own game, according to the police, by "Professor" John R. Jones, who was arrested at the instance of Director Potter of the department of public safety as he was in the act of telephoning to the Angel Gabriel for advice on how to restore to a client the regards which his lady love had transferred to another.

Jones' device for communicating with Gabriel was a queer apparatus in the third story, consisting of a maze of cords, bells, nets and a receiver which looked like a tin funnel.

The alleged imposter was taken into custody by Special Policeman Moriarity and Peterson, who went to Jones in disguise and had their past and future revealed through the aid of the angel.

After Moriarity laid down $14 Jones consulted his new fangled telephone to heaven. Here is what Jones told Moriarity to do: "Go home, take a pistol, stand in the back yard at midnight, and fire two shots, one toward Germantown, the other toward League island. Then put your finger on the tail of a blue maltese cat as it is going over a fence and everything will be lovely at home."

Policeman Peterson told Jones that he was broken hearted because he had been jilted. For $2 Jones got into communication with Gabriel, then put some powder in an envelope for Peterson's friend. It was at about this stage when Peterson pulled out the warrant and Jones collapsed.—Philadelphia Ledger.

along, and the smile on his face encouraged the latter to say:

"Boss, I'm not asking for charity, but for information.

"Well?"

"I've asked over forty different persons in the last week what 'reciprocity' was, and none of 'em was able to make it clear to me."

"I think I can make it plain," replied the citizen. "Just come through into the backyard with me. Do you see that pile of ashes?"

"Yes, sir."

"Well, I want them wheeled out to the alley. You take off your coat, pick up the shovel, load the wheelbarrow, and when the ashes are in the alley you get 10 cents."

"But the job's worth at least a quarter."

"It may be, but in reciprocity——"

"Say, mister," interrupted the tramp, "I beg your pardon for putting you to all this trouble. I got the wrong word. What I wanted to ask about was 'reciprocate,' and as you don't seem to know, and as I am in something of a hurry, I'll just reciprocity over the alley fence and reciprocate back to the regular routine."

Great Britain's Oldest Tavern.

The "Seven Stars," Withy Grove, Manchester, claims to be the oldest licensed house in Great Britain, for it was licensed as a hostelry so long ago as 1356, fifty-five years before Manchester received the charter constituting it a free borough, but the smallness of the town may be judged from the fact that the tolls for its fares were a trifle above $30. There are many traditions connected with the "Seven Stars," one of them being that Dick Turpin and Guy Fawkes visited the place. At any rate, Harrison Ainsworth incorporated this legend into his story about Guy Fawkes. A room on the ground floor bears the words, "Ye Guy Faux Chamber." In 1745 it became the headquarters for the Manchester adherents of Prince Charlie, commanded by Col. Townley. The Practice Nose Mutilation.

In some parts of the world, especially Italy and India, it has been customary to employ removal of the nose as a form of punishment, sometimes judicial, but chiefly as a mode of carrying out private revenge. Especially in some districts of India is it considered a suitable form of punishment for a husband to inflict on a wife whose conduct he does not approve.

FAMOUS "LUCK" OF EDENHALL.

Elfin Goblet Carefully Preserved by English Family.

The best-known of all the "Luck of English families" the famous "Luck of Edenhall, a beautiful cup of [illegible] glass with the slightest tinge of [illegible] in it, with an exquisite ornamentation in an arabesque pattern worked in gold and in red, blue and green enamel. It is an heirloom in the family of the Musgraves of Edenhall, Cumberland, a very ancient family, whose ancestor came over from Normandy with the Conqueror, and whose long line has never been wanting in heirs male but has continued unbroken from that time.

Famous Luck of Edenhall.

down to our own day. When and how they obtained the famous glass cup is not known. While history has observed complete silence on the subject, legend has been correspondingly eloquent about it. Everyone has heard the couplet:

Should the cup e'er break or fall,
Farewell the luck of Edenhall.

and of the origin of the cup more than one version has been given.

The one which is most generally accepted, and which has been handed down from one generation to another time out of mind, is to the effect that once, long ago, in the dim past, a serving-man of the Musgraves—a butler some say—went one night, as usual, to draw water from St. Cuthbert's well, which is close to the house. When near the well he suddenly came upon a very merry company of fairies, who were holding high revelry, and who were so engrossed in their frolic that they did not become aware of his approach until he was almost upon them when they dispersed in a panic, running helter-skelter in great confusion and leaving behind them in their haste a goblet, which the serving-man caught up and made off with. He was pursued by the whole company, who soon discovered their loss, and who were almost beside themselves with rage. He sped along in headlong flight and they tore after him, but were unable to catch him, for breathless and panting, he reached the precincts of the hall just as the foremost among them came up with him. The "little people" were furious, and the Elfin queen, in the frenzy of her passion, pronounced the famous curse. It reached the ears of the serving-man who, carrying his treasure in triumph to his master, told him his tale. The cup was immediately delivered into very safekeeping and has been guarded with almost religious zeal by the family ever since. Thus runs the legend.

The cup is of the highest antiquarian interest and is considered to be one of the finest examples of ancient glass in existence, while the case in which it is always kept is an exceedingly beautiful specimen of medieval art.

Old Massachusetts Homestead.

The Harris homestead, better known as "Crow's Nest," or "Pine Meadow farm," which is situated about a mile from Enfield village in Massachusetts, is one of the oldest and most historic homesteads in the state.

The house was built 100 years ago by William Harris, who, with Ornaments of Leather Pouches.

The Belgian postal authorities have discovered that the natives of the Congo Free State are making a strange use of the postoffice property. For some time past the leather pouches in which the Congo mails were carried have been missing from the Brussels postoffice. They have now been traced to the Congo State. It has been found that the native postal officials have distributed them as presents among their female friends. The black women employ the pouches for personal adornment. Having cut out the ends they pull the bags over their heads, and fasten them around their waists by means of the leather straps. They are wearing them with evident pride.

Intelligent Monkey in Hospital.

A performing monkey named Jack is being treated for pneumonia at the Charing Cross Hospital, London. When she was brought to the hospital Dr. Strickland asked her where the pain was. She placed her hand over her chest. The doctors say she is "very human," though they add that "she does just what she is told and is most grateful," which is somewhat contradictory.

Household Matters

Cleaning the Pipes.

A large lump of soda should be put in every sink once a week and boiling water poured over it. This will cleanse the pipes from an accumulation of grease, etc., and do away with the possibility of requiring a plumber's assistance.

Left-Over Food.

Do not allow food remaining over from meals to stand about in the kitchen. Carefully overhaul anything that is likely to be useful for future occasions and remove it to the icebox. See that nothing is thrown away that can be utilized.

Fine Laundry Work.

Although a family may send the bulk of the laundry out, there are always pieces which cannot be trusted to the average laundry, or else there are articles which are so easily washed at home that it is worth doing in order to reduce the weekly bill.

The Onion in Sickness.

"I have implicit faith in the sanitary properties of an onion," said a trained nurse. "It is my custom to introduce an onion into every sickroom where I am called in, hanging it up somewhere. I believe it attracts all maladies and infections to itself. Violets and roses and lilies are very pretty in a sickroom, and the patient is doubtless cheered when his friends think enough of him to send them, but practical friendship would dictate that a basket of onions be sent. There is something about them hostile to disease. The juice of an onion is a cure for deafness, a roasted onion remedies earache and gumboils, and onions and holly berries bruised together are a certain cure for chilblains. A poultice of onions and cream is also good for bunions. Beau Brummel was opposed to onions, but Sairy Gamp upheld them, and I always considered her a more useful member of the community than the dandy."—Milwaukee Press.

Keep All Tissue Paper.

The tissue paper in which parcels are wrapped should never be thrown away, but smoothed out and laid away in a drawer for future use.

A small pad of tissue paper sprinkled with methylated spirit will give a brilliant polish to mirrors, picture glasses and crystal. The pad, used without the spirit, is excellent for burnishing steel, rubbing grease spots off furniture, polishing silver, etc.

For packing glass, china and ornaments a roll of tissue paper is invaluable, says Home Notes.

When packing hats a wisp of tissue paper should be twisted round all upstanding ends of ribbon, ospreys and wings to prevent crushing. Dress and blouse sleeves should be stuffed with soft paper, and a sheet of it placed between the folds.

Silk handkerchiefs, ribbons and lace should all be ironed between a layer of tissue paper, and the latter is a fine polisher for steel buckles and hatpins.

Egg Sauce—Make smooth two tablespoonfuls of flour in the same amount of butter and add one cupful of hot water and three tablespoonfuls of milk. Season with salt and pepper and pour into a hot tureen with slices of hard-boiled eggs.

Boiled Salmon with Egg Sauce—Prepare the salmon, dip in cold water and dredge with flour; wrap in a cloth and place in a steamer to cook until tender. Remove from the kettle; also remove the cloth; place on a heated platter, garnish and serve with egg sauce.

Apple Puffs—Beat four eggs very light and add three teaspoonfuls of pulverized sugar, a salt spoon of soda and two of cream of tartar, one cupful of milk, one and one-half cupfuls of flour and one-half cupful of finely chopped apples. Beat the mixture for several minutes and bake in gem pans previously buttered and heated.

Raisin Griddle Cakes—Into a cup of sour milk and the same amount of sweet milk stir two cupfuls of wheat flour and one-half cupful of cornmeal, a teaspoonful of salt, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter, a teaspoonful of soda and one-half cupful of chopped raisins. Lastly beat in two eggs and have the griddle on which the cakes are to be cooked as hot as possible without burning.

Peanut Canapes—Pass a cupful of unsalted peanut meats through the meat chopper as often as may be necessary to insure there being no large pieces. Put into a bowl, with a dash of cayenne and another of black pepper, a teaspoonful of salt, a couple of sardines, and chop all together. Then add enough good tomato catsup to make a paste. Spread the mixture on slices of hot buttered toast and serve.

The Bearing Rein

The Duke of Portland, who holds the position of Master of the Horse at the Court of King Edward, described the bearing rein as vulgar at a recent meeting of the English Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals. "To my mind," declared his grace, "the bearing rein is vulgar, and its effect is by no means beautiful. It is ignorantly supposed to be the correct thing, however, among those who know no better."

The next ten years, in the view of a prophetic British engineer, will bring enormous development of electric traction, especially in supplanting steam on suburban branch railroads and short main lines. The incandescent lamp will be improved, cheapening electric lighting, possibly to the extent of driving out all other illuminants. Long distance telephony will be greatly developed and wireless telegraphy will become established on ships, chiefly for safety. The generation and transmission of electric power promise little advance unless some new source of electricity is discovered. Direct production of current from coal remains only a dream, and Tesla's transmission of power without wires is no better. The universal adoption of the steam turbine will be the only advance in power stations.

The gold in sea water has been estimated by Professor Liversidge at one grain per ton. In his British Association address G. T. Bailby calculated that a pinhead drop of cyanide solution of this richness—that is, a cubic millimeter of the weakest solution obtained in treating gold ore—contains a number of molecules expressed by 125 followed by 18 ciphers, and that of these molecules 6,500,000,000 are gold, which is less than 1-60,000 inch apart. Another computer shows that even in this dilution the point of the finest needle would cover 1,500 gold molecules. Thus we touch gold everywhere in the sea, but we are not likely to separate it as a profit.

The Japanese are experts on smoke rings, and it is said in Japan it is considered no uncommon trick to blow three rings of smoke in succession, the second traveling through the first and the third through both. Some stage performers are credited with becoming so expert in smoke blowing that they are not only able to multiply the number of rings thus made, but actually form Japanese characters representing words and sentences. One Japanese juggler, it is declared, proposed to his wife by forming the characters representing his avowal of love through a thin stream of smoke.

My feet were swollen, my eyes puffed, and dizzy spells were frequent. Kidney action was irregular and the secretions highly colored. The Ugly Work of Prejudice

By the Rev. Thomas B. Gregory.

OFTENTIMES one "takes a notion" that this, that or the other person would not pay him for the trouble of making his acquaintance. It is just a "notion"; he does not know the person, has never even so much as exchanged a word with him; he only has the "notion" that he does not care to know him; that he would do well, in fact, to have nothing to do with him.

In other words, you are governed by prejudice. You are permitting yourself to form an opinion without knowing whether the opinion is true or false, right or wrong. To come directly to the point, you are doing one of the worst things that it is possible for you to do—you are misjudging a fellow human being—you are making a picture of the man or woman you have never seen, and you are hating the picture without knowing whether it is a true one or a false one.

How do we know that people are "commonplace" if we have never gone to the trouble of becoming acquainted with them?

It is just possible that they are of the opinion that we are commonplace; and if we knew they were really of that way of thinking how badly we should feel about it!

Commonplace! Why, my dear sir, nobody is commonplace!

Every human being is a miracle of wonder—a whole combination of miracles of wonder!

There was never a poem written, or a romance, or a fairy tale, that was half so thrilling in its interest as the experience of the humblest man or woman, who, betwixt the two eternities, is making the little earthly journey we call "Life!"

To know that experience, to become acquainted with its "Cursts of Great Heart" and "Slips in Sensual Mire," with its Transfiguration Glories and its Gethsemane Griefs, its struggles and triumphs and failures, its thoughts and hopes, its doubts and fears—to know this is to know anything but the commonplace.

"I am a man," said one of the old Roman poets, "and, therefore, nothing that is human shall be alien to me."

That is the spirit with which one should go out into the ways of men—the spirit not of the cynic, but of the loving brother of all mankind.

No one is mean, or cheap, or commonplace in the eyes of him who loves his fellow men.

Get out among men with the idea that they are your brothers; that they are human to the same extent, and in the same way, that you are; that you and they live in the same old world of mystery and wonder, of good and evil, of joy and sorrow, of victory and defeat, of hope and despair; that you and they are travelling the same way, through practically the same experiences, to the same strange old jumping-off-place—do this, and you will find no end of interest and entertainment!

Crush out the ugly, foolish prejudice that is in your soul, discard the notion that you cannot like this, that or the other person, put yourself in a receptive, friendly mood toward everybody, and the stock of your human happiness will be immeasurably enlarged!—New York American.

The Professions Have BECOME "Business, Propositions"

By the Editor of Scribner's.

NOT so long ago, the sneer of "un-democratic" was wont to greet the claim that certain classes of officials who render service of first importance to the community, but of a kind to preclude opportunities for money-making—for example, judges and diplomats—should receive salaries commensurate with the social position attaching to the office. Now that claim is discussed seriously and sympathetically in the press and in private talk. The public is also coming to appreciate the passing of professional caste or prestige, the "standing" of professional men as such, as entailing no small loss to the community. Beyond question this standing was once a compensation to many men for foregoing what President Porter of Yale used to call "vulgar success." Probably this passing of professional prestige is as much due to the inroads of commercialism on the professions as to the general disposition to define success in terms of dollars. The fees charged by an eminent doctor or lawyer, the cash value put on the skill of an expert engineer or architect, the prices paid to a great painter, the profits received by the author of a successful novel or play, all tend almost stealthily to turn professional work into a "business proposition." Thus are elimited the few professional men whose work is any sense altruistic or ethical, notably the clergyman, the teacher, the student, the scientist, the essayist, the poet and the publicist. The old doctrine of plain living and high thinking as their own satisfaction doubtless still suffices for a saving remnant. It is a doctrine, however, which loses much of its appeal when intellectual effort of the same quality and a like theoretical interest finds substantial reward if practically applied.

SOUTHERN COTTON ASSOCIATION

Address From President Harvie Jordan Relating to Reorganization.

The annual reorganization and re-election of all the officers of the Southern Cotton Association in all of the cotton growing counties and parishes is near at hand. The election of officers and delegates for all the civil sub-divisions, townships, militia districts and school precincts, as they are differently termed in the several States, will take place on the first Saturday in December. Farmers, merchants and bankers are urgently requested to meet on that day at their local meeting points in the various sections of the county and choose from one to five delegates to represent them in their county organization. The county or parish meeting will be held at the county site on December 9th, or the following Saturday. These delegates will then perfect their county organization by the election of officers and the selection of from one to three delegates to represent their county or parish at the general State meetings. The State meetings will be held at the different State capitals on January 3rd, and delegates so chosen by the county organizations on December 9th will elect their State officers for 1906, and also the members of the executive committee of the Southern Cotton Association on the same basis of representation as for 1905. The executive committee of the national organization so chosen will meet at Hot Springs, Ark., on the third Tuesday in January, 1906.

Prompt Attention Urged.

Farmers throughout the cotton belt are urged to promptly attend this call on the first Saturday in December and get the machinery of the local organization in motion. Follow the different meetings up and let the association get on a sound, systematic and substantial basis. Members of the Farmers' Union and other organizations are cordially and earnestly invited to join the association that every farmer in the South may co-operate shoulder to shoulder for the one purpose of handling the great staple crop of the South at profitable prices to the producers. The press is earnestly requested to publish this call.

Very truly,
HARVIE JORDAN,
President Southern Cotton Association. tf

ALABAMA STAT

Items of Interest Gathered Over the Entire

Killed by Train.

Bessemer, Ala.—Suttle Lemmonds, a young white man employed as switchman on the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, was instantly killed in the yards of the company at this place by being run over by cars of the company. His head was entirely severed from the body by the wheels of a car passing over him.

Fears for Lumber Schooner.

Mobile, Ala.—Fears are entertained here for the Norwegian schooner Laguna, owned by the Mexican Steamship Company, of Mobile, which sailed from this port September 28 for Colon, Panama, carrying 350,000 feet of pine lumber. She was in charge of Capt. Otto Gruneberg and had a crew of nine. The ordinary voyage to Colon from Mobile is three weeks.

Masons Will Meet.

Montgomery, Ala.—The high Masonic bodies of Alabama met in Montgomery in their annual session, beginning Monday morning and last through Thursday. During that time probably 800 leading Masons of the state were in attendance, and the eyes of all Masons in Alabama were turned in the direction of the handsome temple on the corner of Perry and Washington streets.

Lauderdale Rural Delivery.

Florence, Ala.—Another extension has been made in the rural free delivery service of Lauderdale county, effecting route No. 5, out of Florence. Eleven miles of territory are traversed, covering a thickly populated region. Dr. James T. Pitt, the Florence postmaster, has been indefatigable in his efforts to improve the mail service in this county, and it is now probably the best in the state.

Immigrants Coming.

Birmingham, Ala.—A large number of immigrants from various points in Europe are expected to arrive in Birmingham the last of this week or the first of next week. Frank V. Evans, who represents the Alabama immigration department and who is stationed at Ellis Island, out from New York, has wired Immigration Commissioner Ross C. Smith that a large number of immigrants had arrived on the island and that they would be headed for Alabama at the earliest possible moment.

Attempted Suicide.

Birmingham, Ala.—C. W. Harrison, a carpenter of Avondale, walked into a little grocery store in this city and, handing the proprietor an empty bottle, which was marked "laudanum," stated that he was tired of living and if that didn't kill he would take morphine. The police were notified and Harrison was sent to the police headquarters, and the city physician, Dr. Hayes, went to work, resuscitating the man. The only reason given by Harrison for his rash attempt was that he "was tired of living." Harrison is 38 years of age and has a family.

Florence Is Ready for Election.

Florence, Ala.—A very light vote will be polled at the city election next Tuesday, the registration books having closed with only 623 names enrolled. Of this number about eighty-three are disqualified from various causes, leaving only 540 eligible to vote. The campaign is waxing hotter as the days go by, with Walker a 2 to 1 favorite in the betting and McFarland money hard to find at that.

Cline Is Held.

Anniston, Ala.—Wm. Cline, charged with cold blooded murder of W. Phillips a few days ago, and his son Jake Cline, charged with being an accessory to the crime, were given preliminary hearing before Judge Emmett F. Crook in the county court, and upon the evidence offered William was remanded to jail without bond to await the action of the grand jury, and his son, Jake, was discharged. The verdict of the coroner's jury in finding Cline guilty of murder in the first degree was sustained by Judge Crook.

Woman Asks Damages.

Birmingham, Ala.—Serena Leuch has filed suit in the city court against W. Hagood, a constable at Avondale and his sureties on his bond for $3 damages, claiming that her children were aroused from their bed at a late hour at night and the bed and other things taken from the house November 27. The petitioner avers that she and her children were made to suffer from the cold weather and caused great mental and physical pain and anguish on account of the taking of the goods.

Attempted Suicide.

Birmingham, Ala.—C. W. Harrison, a carpenter of Avondale, walked into a little grocery store in this city and, handing the proprietor an empty bottle which was marked "laudanum," stated that he was tired of living and if that didn't kill he would take morphine! The police were notified and Harrison was sent to the police headquarters, and the city physician, Dr. Graves, went to work, resuscitating the man. The only reason given by Harrison for his rash attempt was that he was tired of living." Harrison is 38 years of age and has a family.

Florence Is Ready for Election.

Florence, Ala.—A very light vote will be polled at the city election next Tuesday, the registration books having closed with only 623 names enrolled. Of this number about eighty-three are disqualified from various causes, leaving only 540 eligible to vote. The campaign is waxing hotter as the days go by, with Walker a 2 to 1 favorite in the betting and McFarland money hard to find at that.

Cline Is Held.

Anniston, Ala.—Wm. Cline, charged with cold blooded murder of W. G. Phillips a few days ago, and his son, Jake Cline, charged with being an accessory to the crime, were given a preliminary hearing before Judge Emmett F. Crook in the county court, and upon the evidence offered William was remanded to jail without bond to await the action of the grand jury, and his son, Jake, was discharged. The verdict of the coroner's jury in finding Cline guilty of murder in the first degree was sustained by Judge Crook.

Woman Asks Damages.

Birmingham, Ala.—Serena Leuch has filed suit in the city court against T. W. Hagood, a constable at Avondale, and his sureties on his bond for $500 damages, claiming that her children were aroused from their bed at a late hour at night and the bed and other things taken from the house November 27. The petitioner avers that she and her children were made to suffer from the cold weather and caused to suffer great mental and physical pain and anguish on account of the taking of the goods.

Will Remove and Enlarge.

Gadsden, Ala.—The Kyle Lumber Company, one of the largest concerns in the state making finished building material, will remove their planing mill and dry kiln from Alabama City to their large new mills in this city. The planing mill and dry kiln will be greatly enlarged and will consume the entire output of several other near-by saw mills. This step is made necessary by the great demand for finished building material turned out by this factory.

Back From Capital.

Montgomery, Ala.—District Attorney Warren S. Reese, who has been in Washington several days in an effort to insure his reappointment, returned to Montgomery on a belated train late Saturday night.

Second Assistant District Attorney Julius Sternfield, who has just been removed from office for holding two places in the department of justice, traveled to Montgomery with Mr. Reese, but went on to Selma.

Sheriff Wanted.

Montgomery, Ala.—Probate Judge P. B. Jarman, of Sumter county, came to Montgomery Saturday to certify a vacancy in the office of sheriff of that county and in the interest of an applicant for the place. The known applicants for the office are J. B. Jackson, a deputy, and Coroner W. G. McDaniel, of Sumter county. The vacancy was caused by the death of the late sheriff, C. M. McCain, which occurred recently. There may be other applicants, but their names have not yet been made known.

Pea River Valley Road.

Enterprise, Ala.—The prospects for the new railroad, the Pea River and Gulf, continue to brighten. Saturday Mr. Booth, for the road, met a committee of representative citizens to discuss the situation. The committee was composed of the following: Capt. J. Rawls, W. E. Law, C. W. Simmons, R. H. Arrington, A. M. Owens, W. S. Edwards, O. C. Doster, Jr., R. A. Clements and T. D. L. Edwards. Mr. Booth spoke in most enthusiastic terms of the project. He staid that from Enterprise the road will have eighty miles of the finest roadbed in the south, and will touch the coast two miles west of Portland, Fla., after passing through fine timber and farming lands. The harbor has twenty-five feet of water the year round.

Death of F. L. Hickox.

Evergreen, Ala.—Fred L. Hickox, one of Evergreen's most prominent citizens, died here Saturday morning after a lingering illness. Mr. Hickox's health began to fail about a year ago, since which time he has gradually grown weaker and less able to attend to business. He took to his bed about three weeks ago, and it was evident from the start that he could not survive many days. He is survived by an only son, Charles F. Hickox, of Philadelphia. His niece, Miss Leach, of Durham, Conn., has been with him during his last days, and his remains were shipped to that place Sunday for interment. Mr. Hickox was born in Durham, but came to Alabama when quite a young man. He was a good citizen, and his death is much regretted by all who knew him.

MUTINEERS LOSE BATTLE

Whole Fleet of Rebels at Sebastopol Reported Surrendered.

RED FLAG WAS HAULED DOWN

Fire Opened by Ten Ships, Aided by Fort and Artillery—Damage to Town and Heavy Loss of Life Feared—Furious Battling For Two Hours and More Between Rebel and Loyal Fleets.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—Sebastopol was the scene of a desperate battle between the mutinous sailors and the troops in the forts on shore.

During the battle the town and the forts were bombarded by the guns of the cruiser Otchakoff, which was soon a burning wreck off Admiralty Point, its hull riddled with shells and its flaunting red design of revolution hauled down. Many of the crew of the Otchakoff were killed or wounded. According to one report, the barracks of the mutineers were carried by storm after the mutinous fleet, which is said to have numbered ten vessels, had surrendered, and the whole positions was again in the hands of the troops under the command of General Nepluefl.

Owing to the interruption of the telegraph, details of the battle were difficult to obtain, but correspondents were informed by the Naval General Staff the battle was begun by the troops on shore, who opened fire on the Otchakoff, which was defiantly displaying the red flag.

The commander of the Otchakoff, Lieutenant Schmidt, immediately accepted the challenge, replying with both batteries, one trained on the town and the other on the Fort Alexander batteries on the north shore.

Captain Zilotti, aide-de-camp to Admiral Girenius, chief of the Naval General Staff, informed a correspondent that the latest dispatches received from Sebastopol showed that the Otchakoff was on fire and badly riddled, with its revolutionary colors hauled down, and he was unable to give later or more definite information.

According to a more detailed report received from another source and purporting to come from the Admiralty, the battle began at 3 o'clock in the afternoon, when Lieutenant Schmidt, not receiving a reply to the demands of the mutineers, opened fire from a fleet of ten ships, to which the northern batteries of Fort Alexander artillery posted on the shore and several vessels which remained loyal replied.

During the naval battle the sailors on shore, entrenched in the barracks defended their position with machine guns and rifle against the attacking infantry. After an engagement lasting two and a half hours, with the Otchakoff riddled and on fire and the cruiser Dnieper and another vessel sunk, Lieutenant Schmidt, who had been badly wounded, surrendered the entire squadron. The mutinous sailors on shore surrendered to the Brest and Bielostok regiments.

According to this report the Panteleimon (formerly the Kniaz Potemkine) was injured below the waterline and a torpedo boat was ashore on the rocks.

No details of the casualties or of the damage suffered by the town were obtainable by the Admiralty, but owing to the confined space in which the action was fought it seemed improbable that the town escaped without heavy damage.

The demands of the mutineers are said to have included besides the fifteen proposals dealing with service conditions the convocation of a constituent assembly and the complete realization of the liberties promised by the imperial manifesto.

Vice-Admiral Chuknin was in command of the loyal ships, which included the Pateleimon (ex-Kniaz Potemkin), and made a vigorous demonstration. General Meller Gakomelskie, commander of the Seventh Army Corps, with 21,000 infantry and artillery, was in command ashore.

When the battle began the batteries on the north side, which were supposed to be loyal instead of firing upon the mutineers joined cause with them and directed their fire on the city and on the south side batteries. The Brest Regiment thereupon charged the north batteries with fixed bayonets and the guns were soon turned upon the rebel ships and the barracks.

According to the Listock, the conspiracy which led to the mutiny went on under the noses of the officers and even Minister of Marine Birileff, who was at Sebastopol a fortnight ago, suspected nothing. The sailors waited until they were assured of support from the troops, most of whom, however, refused to go over to the mutineers when the time came.

During the first three days the mutineers were orderly. They sent delegates to the shopkeepers requesting them not to close, as there would be no disorder and asking the inhabitants not to leave the city. They also sent out patrols with instructions to arrest the roughs who were seeking to take advantage of the situation. In all their demonstrations the mutineers sang the National Hymn to show that the only traitors were those who refused to satisfy their demands.

Father Gapon Heard From.

Father Gapon, who is hiding in St. Petersburg, Russia, in an interview said that the revolutionary leaders were making the tactical mistake which he did, of preaching an armed rebellion.

HEAVY STORMS AT SEA

Ships on the Ocean and Great Lakes Wrecked by the Waves.

MANY LIVES REPORTED LOST

Steel Barge Goes Down Off Massachusetts Coast—Life Savers Rescue Crew of Wreck at Chatham Bar—French Ship Sinks With All on Board in the Bosphorus—Three Die on Superior.

Boston, Mass.—The foundering of the new steel barge Delawanna and the loss of four persons on board, including Captain John B. Munsey and his wife, was reported here by the tug Scranton, which had been towing the Delawanna from New York City.

The barge went down in a heavy sea at 8.30 o'clock at night about eight miles east by south from Minots Light. Those lost were Captain Munsey and wife and the engineer and the cook of the barge.

One of the crew of the Delawanna was saved. So quickly did the barge founder after the snapping of the hawsers that the crew of the tug had absolutely no time to render aid. The rescued sailor was found clinging to a fragment of a broken boat, and almost unconscious.

On board the tug the man revived sufficiently to inform Captain Pierce of the tug that the Delawanna was thrown on her beam ends by a terrific sea, and the water flooded into the hold. She sank almost instantly, snapping the tow line as she plunged.

Crew Escapes From Wreck.

Chatham, Mass. — The schooner Charles E. Sears of Calais, Me., Captain Edward Alwood, went aground at Chatham Bar late at night, and probably will be a total loss. The captain and crew of four men were taken off by the life saving crew.

Wrecked in the Bosphorus.

Marseilles, France.—A dispatch from Constantinople reports that the steamship Boieldieu, belonging to this port, has been wrecked in the Bosphorus and that all the members of her crew, numbering twenty-two, are believed to have been drowned.

The Boieldieu was an iron steamship of 2021 tons gross, 280 feet long, 35 feet beam and 24 feet deep. She was built at Liverpool in 1881, and was owned by A. Artuad, of Marseilles.

Three men lost their lives in the wreck of the scow George Herbert at Two Islands. They were Ole Miller, George Olsen and Ole Nelson, all of Duluth.

When the scow went on the rocks William Hicks and Charles Johnson saved themselves by jumping to shore. The other three lacked courage, and as the scow broke shouted their last good-by and disappeared. Hicks and Johnson were cared for by fishermen.

Cedric Ice-Coated.

New York City.—The first of the great fleet of trans-Atlantic steamships to enter New York harbor ice-clad was the giant Cedric of the White Star Line, which docked here in the morning.

The whole hull of the big liner was encased in a glittering coat of white, and her bows were crusted thick with ice where the heavy seas encountered during the last day's run had swept repeatedly.

The Cedric got in about twenty hours late, due to the heavy head winds against which she had to force her way during the entire trip.

Went Down With Nineteen.

Ashland, Wis.—The steel steamer Ira H. Owen, with a crew of nineteen, is now known to have gone down on Lake Superior in the great storm. Its commander was Captain Joseph Hulligan, of Buffalo, N. Y.

The Owen was last sighted about forty miles off the Apostle Islands, when it seemed to be in a bad way. Then the snow shut it from view.

Captain Chamberlain, of the steamer Sir William Siemens, reported that ten miles east of Outer Island he passed a mass of wreckage, including life preservers marked Ira H. Owen.

Four vessels were reported, including the Owen. The tug Maxwell and scow with ten men are lost. The steamer Western Star was wrecked at Ontonagon and the Vega at Fox Island.

The Next of Kin.

One night they spake of me—my kin,
Wide-wandered from the earth!
The dew that fell was from her eyes,
Who here did give me birth;
My father's voice was in the wind;
"I sowed, but there is dearth,
Or bitterness, as of the ash
The gale lifts from my hearth!"

My little sister (flown in Spring)
Leaned past the evening star;
"Till now I waited for thee here
Beside the crystal bar;
But that which thou hast done, alas!
From thee removes me far;
And in the wreath I made for thee
The flowers all weeping are!"

They spake of me, of me—my kin,
In lengthened line arrayed;
From one to other passed the word,
On blanching lips effrayed;
They mounted far—an ancient host,
By scorn or pity swayed!
Of me they all together spake,
Yet none would give me aid.

Then from the lessening line, came one
With mine own form and face;
"Thy grandsire's grandsire knew me not,
Yet am I of thy race;
Thy good—thy ill—and all thou art,
To me mayst surely trace;
And, nex of kin, I'll stand by thee,
In the dread Judgment Place!

"I best can say how that wild blood,
Which ruled thine erring will,
Ran, undiverted, from my spring,
Thy fragile cup to fill;
And, when the rest thy doom invoke,
From Heaven's midnight hill,
Thy next of kin for thee will plead,
And they shall hold them still!"

WHICH WAS THE GREATEST?

A Story From Turke

BY REV. GEORGE

Three men were walking along the road when they met the Cadi, the judge, who gave them a salaam and passed on. Then the men began to quarrel as to the one for whom the salutation was intended.

"It was for me," said one. "No," said another, "it was for me." "No," said the third, "he saluted me."

When they could not agree about the matter they determined to seek the Cadi and ask him for which of them he intended his salaam.

They found the Cadi and asked to which one he gave the salutation. He replied, "To the greatest fool."

But that did not help matters, for each of the men still claimed the salutation. One said, "I am the greatest fool." "No," said the second, "I am the greatest fool." "No," urged the third, "I am the greatest fool of all."

So they appealed to the wise Cadi again, asking him please to tell them which one he considered the greatest fool. He answered, "Tell me some of your past experiences and conduct, so that I may justly decide."

So the first began:

"Your Honor, I am sure no one is a greater fool than I am. For I have a wife who is a very good sort of person, but she has one fault—she will not always do as I bid her. Sometime when I tell her to do something she refuses, and sometimes she tells me to do it myself. So in order to avoid difficulties I proposed to her that whoever spoke first in the morning should do whatever work was needed to be done about the house that day. She agreed, though she is naturally talkative, being a woman, and that night we retired to rest as usual.

Next morning when we woke I signalled her to start the fire, but she made no response, though I expected her to commence talking, according to her custom. By and by I showed that I was hungry and motioned her to get me some food. She motioned me to get it myself.

"A long time passed and I could not make her stir. The animals in the stable under our room began calling for their breakfast, and finally the calf pushed open our door and looked in, bellowing for food. I made signs to my 'house lad' to go and tie the calf, but she remained motionless and never uttered a word. At last I lost patience and, seizing a stick, proceeded to beat her so profoundly that the stick broke in my hand and she fled out of the house.

"As I lay there meditating on my uncomfortable condition and her uncomfortable disposition, my wife's brother knocked. I kept silent, and he opened the door, looked around for his sister. I answered nothing, and he, seeing the room in confusion, with his sister gone, evidences of a struggle lying about and the broken stick still near me, charged me with having murdered his wife. As I made no reply, he soon roused the community, called the police, and had me taken off to prison.

"At the trial I said not a word, my wife was not forthcoming and the evidence against me was such that I was sentenced to be hung. They led me to the scaffold, and the preparations for my execution were all complete, when a woman's shriek was heard on the outskirts of the crowd, and my wife came rushing up, begging them not to execute her kind husband, and relieving me from all charge of crime.

"As soon as the house was removed from my neck I raised my finger and said to my dish and spoon washer, 'You spoke first; you go and tie the calf.' But I beg your honor to observe what a fool I was for making such a bargain with a woman.

Then the second began his story: "But Mr. Cadi, I have been a greater fool still. Some time ago I was troubled with toothache, and one day when I was going to Amasia to market, my wife advised me to go to the barber and have him pull it out. I went to the barber accordingly; he pulled the decayed tooth and the pain was relieved.

"When I reached our village that evening, my house-sweeper inquired how much I paid the barbar for pulling my tooth. I told her one cent, whereupon she flew into a violent passion, saying it was not strange that we always remained poor when I had so little notion of economy.

"'Don't you know,' she railed, 'that it is all one to the barber whether he pulls one tooth for a customer or thirty-two? His price is the same for any number of teeth. Why didn't you make the most of your bargain while you were about it?"

"So the next day I made an excuse to go to Amasia again, and asked the barber whether he remembered pulling a tooth for me the day before. He replied that he did. I asked him his prices and he told me that he charged the same price, one cent, for drawing any number of teeth from one up to thirty-two. On my asking whether he would object to giving a good customer the worth of his money in two installments, he replied that he had no objection whatever, so he pulled the rest of my teeth.

"I reached home that evening with my mouth full of blood, but without a tooth in my head, and boasted to my deficiency of my shrewdness in bargaining and of the great return I had received for my money. But I soon had reason to find out what a great fool I was to part with a mouthful of sound teeth."

"My case was worse than that," said the third man. "We have always been very poor, and at last I got so tired of poverty that I told my wife I could stand it no longer. I have tried by every honest means in my power to better our condition, but without avail, and now I was determined to become a highwayman and wrest from others the luxuries that I could not win by toil.

She asked what I would do when I was caught and put to cross-questioning as to my conduct, and I said that I would invent such stories as would enable me to escape. But when she inquired what I would do if they put me to torture to make me confess, then I hesitated.

"My house-sweeper proposed, therefore, that we should experiment a little, and if I found I could endure torture I might embark on my plan to become a highwayman, while if I could not endure torture I should continue to lead a virtuous life. I agreed and she began to apply various kinds of torture to my person. She applied pincers cold and hot to my flesh, scratched me with a razor, placed hot coals in walnut shells and laid them on my naked skin, and I easily stood these and many other things.

"Then my house sweeper got the iron brand with which they mark the forehead of a thief, heated it and applied it to me, and that I found more than I could endure. So with the prospect of that terrible brand before me I was afraid of becoming a robber, and yet my forehead already bears the mark. I am as poor as ever, as virtuous as ever, and yet I bear the brand of a thief. Am I not the greatest fool yet?"

The reader or hearer is expected to make answer for the wise Cadi and decide which was the greatest fool.—Congregationalist and Christian World.

SAVING "OLD SOUTH."

The Debt Which the United States Owes to Mrs. Hemenway.

The ground on which the Old South stands was the dwelling place of Gov. Winthrop. Benjamin Franklin was baptized in this meeting house. The voices of Adams and Hancock and Warren and Washington have been heard within its walls. You will see, back of the pulpit platform and below the quaint old sounding-board, the very window through which Gen. Joseph Warren came to deliver his famous oration on the anniversary of the Boston massacre because the crowd in and around the church was so great he could not enter by the door.

In this church were held some of the great meetings leading up to the famous Boston "Tea Party." Indeed, it was from this "Sanctuary of Freedom," as it has been called, that the band of men disguised as Indians, started for the wharf to board the ships and throw overboard the taxed tea that had created such a turmoil in Boston. If you should follow the exact route taken by that band of "Mohawks" on that eventful December day in the year 1773, you would finally reach a modern building on the site of Griffin's wharf, at which lay moored on December 16, 1773, the three British ships with cargoes of tea. This house bears a tablet commemorating the famous "Boston Tea Party," which threw the cargoes into the sea.

Did you ever hear the story of how the Old South was "saved?" Reverence for historic landmarks did not run so high thirty or forty years ago as it does today, and in our centennial year of 1876 it was proposed to sell the Old South simply for the value of its bricks and timbers, and tear it down, that a modern business block might be built on its site. Indeed, it was sold—"knocked down" at auction to a bidder for the meager sum of $1,315!

Suddenly a wave of patriotic feeling swept over the city of Boston. The papers and some of the people began to protest against the tearing down of the old "Sanctuary of Freedom," and a movement was set on foot to raise funds to buy the church from its purchaser, and to buy also the ground on which it stood. This good plan might never have succeeded had it not ben for one noble and loyal woman in Boston, Mrs. Mary Hemenway, of hallowed memory. When the difficulty of securing funds for the purchase of the old meeting-house became known to her, she came forward with a gift of $100,000, and thus the old meeting-house was saved—to stand as an object lesson to the children of future generations.

Having given such a large sum to help save the Old South Meeting-house, Mrs. Hemenway felt that it should be something more than a mere silent monument. She determined that it should be a real, living force in our country, and particularly to the children of Boston. She determined that it should renew and increase its fame as a temple of freedom, and that its sacred walls should again echo and re-echo to the sound of patriotic utterances, and that some of these utterances should come from the lips of the boys and girls of Boston; and thus the Old South Lecture Course and the Old South Prizes were established. Each year a prize of forty dollars and another of twenty-five dollars are given to the graduates of the Boston high schools who write the best essays on historic or patriotic topics. The committee having this work in charge announce the subjects in June, just before the schools close, and the competitors must submit their essays the following January. Then on Washington's birthday there is a patriotic gathering of the school children of Boston in the old meeting-house, and the names of the prize winners are announced.—From J. L. Harbour's "The Children's Hour in the Old South Meeting-House" in St. Nicholas.

Predicament of a Girl With a Supposed Thief.

This is the way a girl related a recent experience to her chum:

"Nettie, I never felt so small in my life and I'm just dying to tell you all about it. I had to go out this morning and it looked so much like rain I put on my mackintosh. Just as I got to the door I met papa and he gave me my month's allowance. I knew I ought to go up stairs and put it away, but I was in such an awful hurry I slid it down in the pocket of the waterproof. I rushed for a car and when I got in it it was so crowded I had to stand. I was squeezed so close to a man I could hardly breathe and more people getting in all the time. I had forgotten all about my money until I felt a hand slowly sliding down to the bottom of my pocket.

"Horrors! it was a pickpocket! I had cold chills all over me. I didn't want to scream and get everybody looking at me, and then if I did I was afraid he would get away, and I was determined he shouldn't have my money. I just shifted the strap to my other hand as though I hadn't noticed anything, and without looking at him slipped my hand down and caught his wrist. I held on with a death grip, but the man never tried to take his hand away. I didn't know what to do, but I did hold on, and so we went block after block. Oh, I really thought I should die.

"I finally concluded to get out at the next corner and see what he would do. He never moved, and when the car stopped I made a quick twist around, and when I went to pull his hand out of my pocket, what do you think? I had had my hand in his overcoat pocket all the time. What did I do? I got out of that car and ran a whole block without stopping. My money? Oh, that was in my pocket, all right, just where I put it."—New York Press.

A Two Headed Turtle.

A perfect two headed turtle is a very unusual animal, but there is one in captivity in Washington now that has excited considerable curiosity among the snake charps of the National Museum.

The turtle is a very plain little fellow, and is now in the possession of a local bird fancier. It was captured over in Virginia some time ago and brought to this city by a hunter. It is about as big as a silver dollar, and looks like an ordinary young land turtle, except that there are two perfectly developed heads sticking out of its shell. Otherwise it seems to be perfectly normal. Just what its arrangements are inside, no one knows, but it eats with both mouths and winks its four little beadlike eyes in "blocks of two," each head being indifferent to the others performance in this regard.

It has but one tail and the usual turtle complement of four legs. The owner is making a determined efforts to raise it, and the little fellow will not be cut open to investigate his interior department so long as he consents to feed on flies and fresh meat, which just now constitutes the chief part of his diet.

Belgian women take a pride in doing their own work.

KISSES.

One egg, one cup sugar, one-half cup butter, one-half cup of milk, one teaspoonful cream of tartar, one-half of soda, flour enough to make a stiff dough; drop on tins and sprinkle over with powdered sugar. Bake in a quick oven.

MAYONNAISE.

Take the yolks of two eggs, pepper and salt, stir continuously, always turning the spoon slowly from left to right, add to the yolks, by degrees, olive oil until thick and the quantity required; next put in a teaspoonful of tarragon still stirring. Place on ice until ready to serve.

PLUM PIE.

Have a light crust of puff paste, bake this in the oven then put in, if fresh, plums previously stoned, sweetened and slightly stewed. If canned add sugar. Place on the top of the pie and heat again. Put on ice until cold.

FRIED TURNIPS.

Peel and slice the turnips and throw into cold water. At the end of half an hour drain and put over the fire in a saucepan with a little salted water. Cook until they begin to get tender, or until a fork pierces them easily. Be careful not to break them; drain and, when cold, pat them dry between the folds of a towel. Dip first in cracker-crumbs, then in beaten egg, then in cracker-crumbs. Lay on a dish in the ice-box for the crust to harden. Fry in butter to a light brown. Serve very hot.

SCALLOPED CELERY.

The coarse outer stalks of celery may be used for this dish. Cut into inch lengths, and cover with salted water. Stew until tender. Drain, and keep hot while you make a white sauce by cooking together a tablespoonful each of butter and flour, and when these bubble pouring upon them a cup of milk. Stir to a smooth white sauce, put the celery into this, and turn into a buttered pudding dish. Dust the top with buttered crumbs, and set in the oven until lightly browned. This is a simple and very palatable dish.

SHEPHERD'S PIE.

Two cups minced veal, one tablespoon butter, one tablespoon flour, one cup water or stock, salt and pepper, one teaspoon minced onion. Make sauce with butter, flour and water, add seasoning and minced onion; add one egg beaten slightly; boil gently three minutes; add minced meat, stir until hot, but not boiling; turn into buttered baking-dish, put over it a layer of potatoes mashed and creamed with quarter cup milk and one tablespoon butter for two cups potatoes. Brush over with butter. Brown in good hot oven.

PEPPER RELISH.

Pepper relish is usually made of green peppers, green tomatoes and celery; but cabbage may be substituted for the peppers. For the latter, chop fine a small head of firm, white cabbage, six large green peppers, taking care not to leave in any seeds, and a nice bunch outer leaves; put into a large bowl, sprinkle with a half cupful of salt, mix well, cover and let stand over night. The next morning drain in a colander, then pack in a stone jar with two tablespoonfuls of mustard seed mixed through it. Put into a porcelain kettle three pints of vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful each of whole cloves, allspice and whole pepper, a clove of garlic and one onion minced; simmer gently twenty minutes, to extract the virtue of the spices; strain and pour boiling hot water over the vegetables. There should be enough of vinegar to cover. When cold cover the jar and keep in a cool place. A little red pepper may be added, if you like it very hot.

USEFUL HINTS.

Buttered and salted popcorn is often used as a substitute for salted almonds.

A good filling for sandwiches is made by mixing finely chopped pecan nuts with Chutney.

An ordinary headache may generally be cured by applying water as hot as it can be borne to the feet and back of the neck.

Flat irons should be kept with particular care, and occasionally rubbed over with wax to keep their surface perfectly smooth.

Varnished paint can be kept as bright as though freshly done by washing in water some time a bag filled with flaxseed, and then using it as a cloth to clean the paint.

For brass goods, lemon juice with a little fine silver sand is excellent. They should afterwards be rinsed with boiling water and polished with a soft rag.

For cleaning spouts of tea and coffee pots always have a small bottle brush hanging in your pantry. This helps wonderfully in cleaning and costs only a few cents.

Stirring anything over a hot stove often causes brittle finger nails. Try rubbing a little almond oil in every night and keep a pair of loose gloves to slip on when cooking.

In color the squirrel fish is a brilliant red.

The Seeming Paradox is Now a Delightful Reality, Because of a Scientific vancement as W Its Way

TOUR OF THE WOR ..... IN YOUR EA

By ARTHUR BONSA

HAVE you dreamed of traveling? Have you longed to know what it would mean to stand in the places where the world's history has been made, to see for yourself the grandeur and beauty, the stupendous energy and the endlessly varied life not only in our own land but also in the distant countries of the world?

The progress of scientific invention now makes it possible for hundreds of thousands to realize this dream for themselves and for their children. Travel of the truest kind is within your reach, and yet without using either ship or railway or any of the ordinary bodily conveyances.

This statement is so extraordinary in its claims that probably no reader of these lines will believe it at first. Indeed no one could have been more sceptical about it than the writer was until he visited the New York establishment of Underwood & Underwood, the business organization which is responsible for this truly remarkable development of a great scientific invention—as wonderful in its way as the telephone.

The first few minutes of my visit were devoted to some interesting optical experiments.

I was handed a neutral tinted card on which stereoscopic photographs of one scene were mounted in the manner with which many people are familiar. two prints on one card, side by side. They looked like duplicate prints from a single well-made negative.

In the photographs I saw represented a field with a cluster of houses beyond, and breaking surf on a distant sea beach; it was down in Martinique. A couple of men stood talking in the field close by, and I could see some of the village houses in the space between their standing figures.

I was asked to examine this also through the stereoscope. It seemed to me hardly necessary, after the inspection I had already given the twin photographs; however, I put the card in the rack and placed my head against the hood of the instrument.

Here I was astonished again. I was no longer looking at a photograph—I was seeing out into actual space, into an actual place, and, moreover, this place was startlingly different from what I had supposed when I looked at the flat photograph without any instrument! Instead of looking from the side of a field, I found I was on a high bluff, dropping abruptly perhaps five hundred feet just beyond the two men. The houses that I had supposed to stand at the farther side of the field showed up as they really were, at least half a mile distant over at the other side of a ravine. I couldn't believe my eyes at first. Then I asked: "What causes this effect of being right there with open space all around?"

"In the few minutes we have, there would not be time to explain fully," was the answer, "but the possibility of these effects of reality depends first of all on the principle of two-eye seeing as distinguished from one-eye seeing. You must begin with this principle if you are to understand this travel system. Most people never stop to think why they have two eyes. If the question occurs to them at all, they probably fancy the second eye is merely a piece of reserve equipment—nature's provision against helplessness in case of accident to one organ of vision."

Then my informant went on to explain that a person with normal eyesight sees very differently from a person with only one eye. To demonstrate that statement, I was asked to make two or three personal experiments. First I held my right arm out straight in front of me, on a level with the shoulder, the hand open, the palm towards the left. Holding it in that position I looked at the hand with my right eye alone, keeping the left eye shut. I found I could see the edge of my hand and a part of the back of the hand. Next, keeping arm and hand in the same position, I closed the right eye and used only the left eye. That time I saw the edge of my hand and a bit of the palm, but I could not see around on the back of the hand as before. Last of all, I used both eyes together. Somewhat to my own surprise, I noticed that I could then see the edge of the hand, part of the palm, and also part of the back of the hand. Indeed, I found I actually saw part way around the hand.

The representative of the stereographers then explained that a binocular or stereoscopic camera differs from an ordinary camera as a two-eyed man differs from a cripple with only one eye. It has two lenses set side by side as far apart as a person's two eyes. One lens takes in exactly what would be seen by the right eye of a person standing in the camera's place. The other lens takes in what would be seen by the observer's left eye. Prints made from the two negatives, are, of course, almost alike and yet never precisely alike. Their mounting on the stereograph card is a process requiring exact, expert workman-

Seeming Paradox Is Now a Delightful Reality, Because of a Scientific Advancement as Wonderful in Its Way as the Telephone

TOUR OF THE WORLD ..... IN YOUR EASY CHAIR

By ARTHUR BONSAL.

HAVE you dreamed of traveling? Have you longed to know what it would mean to stand in the places where the world's history has been made, to see for yourself the grandeur and beauty, the stupendous energy and the endlessly varied life not only in our own land but also in the distant countries of the world?

The progress of scientific invention now makes it possible for hundreds of thousands to realize this dream for themselves and for their children. Travel of the truest kind is within your reach, and yet without using either ship or railway or any of the ordinary bodily conveyances.

This statement is so extraordinary in its claims that probably no reader of these lines will believe it at first. Indeed no one could have been more skeptical about it than the writer was until he visited the New York establishment of Underwood & Underwood, the business organization which is responsible for this truly remarkable development of a great scientific invention as wonderful in its way as the telephone.

The first few minutes of my visit were devoted to some interesting optical experiments.

I was handed a neutral tinted card on which stereoscopic photographs of one scene were mounted in the manner with which many people are familiar, two prints on one card, side by side. They looked like duplicate prints from a single well-made negative.

In the photographs I saw represented a field with a cluster of houses beyond, and breaking surf on a distant sea beach; it was down in Martinique. A couple of men stood talking in the field close by, and I could see some of the village houses in the space between their standing figures.

I was asked to examine this also through the stereoscope. It seemed to me hardly necessary, after the inspection I had already given the twin photographs; however, I put the card in the rack and placed my head against the hood of the instrument.

Here I was astonished again. I was no longer looking at a photograph—I was seeing out into actual space, into an actual place, and, moreover, this place was startlingly different from what I had supposed when I looked at the flat photograph without any instrument! Instead of looking from the side of a field, I found I was on a high bluff, dropping abruptly perhaps five hundred feet just beyond the two men. The houses that I had supposed to stand at the farther side of the field showed up as they really were, at least half a mile distant over at the other side of a ravine. I couldn't believe my eyes at first. Then I asked: "What causes this effect of being right there with open space all around?"

"In the few minutes we have, there would not be time to explain fully," was the answer, "but the possibility of these effects of reality depends first of all on the principle of two-eye seeing as distinguished from one-eye seeing. You must begin with this principle if you are to understand this travel system. Most people never stop to think why they have two eyes. If the question occurs to them at all, they probably fancy the second eye is merely a piece of reserve equipment—nature's provision against helplessness in case of accident to one organ of vision."

Then my informant went on to explain that a person with normal eyesight sees very differently from a person with only one eye. To demonstrate that statement, I was asked to make two or three personal experiments. First I held my right arm out straight in front of me, on a level with the shoulder, the hand open, the palm towards the left. Holding it in that position I looked at the hand with my right eye alone, keeping the left eye shut. I found I could see the edge of my hand and a part of the back of the hand. Next, keeping arm and hand in the same position, I closed the right eye and used only the left eye. That time I saw the edge of my hand and a bit of the palm, but I could not see around on the back of the hand as before. Last of all, I used both eyes together. Somewhat to my own surprise, I noticed that I could then see the edge of the hand, part of the palm, and also part of the back of the hand. Indeed, I found I actually saw part way around the hand.

The representative of the stereographers then explained that a binocular or stereoscopic camera differs from an ordinary camera as a two-eyed man differs from a cripple with only one eye. It has two lenses set side by side as far apart as a person's two eyes. One lens takes in exactly what would be seen by the right eye of a person standing in the camera's place. The other lens takes in what would be seen by the observer's left eye. Prints made from the two negatives are, of course, almost alike and yet never precisely alike. Their mounting in the stereograph card is a process requiring exact, expert workmanship. When the stereograph is set in place in the stereoscope, the right eye sees what it would see on the spot and the left eyes sees what it would see on the spot. The result is analagous to that of looking with both eyes at your outstretched hand. You see part way around the near objects, and that makes them stand out real and solid just as they do in your ordinary, everyday experiences of seeing things in your accustomed surroundings. It gives to your eyes perfect depth, perfect solidity, perfect space.

"Thus you see," my informant continued, "the two small prints 3x3 inches in size and about six inches in front of the eyes in the stereoscope serve exactly as two windows through which we look and beyond which we see the object or place standing out as large as the original object or place would appear to the eyes of one standing where the camera stood. Remarkable as these statements may seem, when thoughtfully considered, still they are absolutely true, based on scientific facts which may be found explained in any reliable treatise on binocular vision."

I sat back and wondered. It seemed hard to realize that, in the stereoscope, I could see in their natural size parts of countries, cities and towns all over the earth.

"But," he went on, "we now come to a far more remarkable fact. Psychologists are saying that if we look at these life-size scenes in the right way, namely, if while looking we have some means of knowing definitely where on the earth's surface we are standing, in just what direction and over what territory we are looking, and if we take time to think of our surroundings there, then we can gain a distinct sense or experience of location in that place, or what they call genuine experiences of travel. Of course, you would not be likely to believe this at once, but reserve your judgment for a few minutes.

"To furnish the knowledge to make this possible a new map system has been devised and patented—an entirely new system."

Then he proceeded to show me a most ingenious map system of which I had never before heard. Like many another bright idea it is essentially so simple one wonders why it had not been devised before. He showed me several of the patent maps. All were in the first place excellent, clear maps of the ordinary sort, but a clever device of conspicuous red lines showed just where a person was to stand, in whatever vicinity it might be, in what direction he was to face and just how much territory in a town, a house interior or a stretch of open country he was to include in his outlook from that particular point.

"But what are educators saying about this?" I asked. "Much," was the reply. "Here is what a professor of psychology in New York University, Professor Lough, says:

"'The essential thing for us is not that we have the actual physical place or object before us, as a tourist does, rather than a picture, but that we have some at least of the same facts of consciousness, ideas and emotions, in the presence of the picture, that the tourist gains in the presence of the scene. This is entirely possible in the stereoscope.'

"But," he added, "we do not claim that even these experiences can be gotten unless the stereographs are used with certain helps and in the right spirit. (Speaking in a general way this means we must treat the place seen in the stereoscope as we would treat the place itself in actual travel).

"To supply this need books are being prepared by people of wide travel and broad culture to accompany the stereographed scenes of a city or country."

Then I was shown guide books by such men as Jesse Lyman Hurlbut, D. D., on Palestine; Dr. D. J. Ellison and Professor James C. Egbert, Jr., of Columbia University, on Italy; Professor James H. Breasted, of Chicago University, on Egypt; Professor James Ricalton, the veteran traveler, on China; George Kennan, the famous journalist and lecturer, on Martinique. In these books the authors or guides make their comments on the different places seen through the stereoscope in the same natural order that they would treat them during an actual journey. They point out the objects of interest in each place and give some of the history connected with it. Each strives to answer the very questions a newcomer would be likely to ask when on the ground. There are many ingenious and scientifically helpful methods worked out by these writers that I must leave unnoticed here.

"You see," concluded my informant, "this is no sleight of hand scheme or magical performance. This travel system is worked out in accordance with well established though not generally known laws of the mind. If the right methods are observed it is now being recognized that genuine experiences of travel may be gained in one's home."

THE PULPIT.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY THE REV. C. R. McNALLY.

Subject: Spiritual Worship.

New York City.—Sunday morning, in the Sixth Avenue Baptist Church, the pastor, the Rev. Charles R. McNally, preached on the subject, "The Spirit God and Spiritual Worship." The text was from John iv:23-24: "The hour cometh and now is when the true worshipers shall worship the Father in spirit and in truth, for the Father seeketh such to worship Him." "God is a spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth." Mr. McNally said:

These words might well lead into the byways of philosophy. That, however, is an enjoyment which we do not now intend to permit ourselves to indulge in. We might with profit point out from these words that the man of old did not think of himself just as man thinks of himself to-day. He was a unit, and thought of nothing outside of his immediate environment, and of that chiefly from the point of view of its relation to his bodily needs. His mind did not grasp the thought of the beyond or the hereafter. His dead companion was not thought of as being essentially different from that which he was in life. His horse, his tools, etc., were buried with him, with the belief that in some unseen but material paradise or hunting ground he would live as he had lived, needing and using the same things.

Man does not now so view himself. He no longer thinks of himself as a unit. He is divided. His body is one thing and his mind or soul is another. Man still views himself as body and spirit. Deep within the inners of his own nature he feels that while they are doubtless closely associated, his body is one thing and his soul quite another. This distinction did not appeal to the ancient. He knew nothing of it. His was the simple, unquestioning life of a child.

The religious impulse, however, has always been an integral part of human life, and has ever, in one form or another, sought to express itself. Crude though it may have been in its beginnings, the consciousness of God has never been absent from the human mind. When it first appears it seems to have been materialistic, or anthropomorphic in the grossest sense. Gradually there was the development of a tendency to look in upon himself and with this tendency man came into possession of the idea of an inner thought self. Thus mind, or soul, was distinguished from the external or material, and a conception of God became both a possibility and reality. The development of this distinction may be clearly traced in the Old Testament. For many centuries the materialistic was the dominant one, but alongside of it grew up a religion of the spirit. The former finds its highest expression in the ornate formal worship of Judaism. The religion of the law with all its material accompaniment was the effort of the human mind to grasp the thought of God in the terms of the material. Within Judaism there was the development of the religion of the spirit. The prophets were its messengers, but the people persistently turned away from them, and from their message.

The conversation of Jesus with the woman at the wellside is interesting and instructive in many ways. She was a woman and the strain of human nature was very marked in her life as is shown by the fact that when Jesus had her cornered and face to face with her sin she was like many who have followed her, anxious to divert the conversation from considerations of such a personal nature to a religious argument. Jesus using her own thought imparts to her the deepest lesson that has ever been uttered in the realm of religion. When the woman would have Him discuss the relative merits of formal Judaism, or formal Samaritanism, He turned upon her the full light of divine truth and declares what the world has all been too slow to learn, that Judaism and Samaritanism are nothing, but that the religion of the spirit alone is essential religion. God is spirit, and is not to be worshiped by men's hands, or any external form whatsoever. He is confined to no mountain top, no temple walls inclose Him. Immaterial and imperceptible to the senses, He fills all things with His being. He knows, feels, and wills. He seeks those to whom He has given a nature fashioned in His own image to be His worshipers. Only those who have learned to know Him as the Infinite Mind or Supreme Spirit can have fellowship with Him, and this because such worship alone corresponds with His nature.

It takes the world a long time to outgrow its materialism, and to grow into the thought of Christ. The path of history has led into deep valleys and over the mountain peaks. There have been times when it seemed that the race was about to move out into a more spiritual thought of God. Under the leadership of a Paul, an Augustine, a Calvin, a Luther or a Wesley, the dawn of a brighter day seemed at hand, but from these mountain peaks the pathway has invariably led down into the low vales of the material and sordidly earthly.

We have been, indeed, we now are, for the dawn of the brighter day has hardly appeared, in one of those materialistic swamps from which arise the miasma of sordidness, worldliness and sin. That this is peculiarly true of America is not without cause and explanation. Never in the history of the world has it been given to a nation to enter into the rich heritage that has been ours. The past hundred years has been a period of discovery and development. Discovery in that America and the world has become conscious of the almost inexhaustible wealth unfolded within the bosom of her lakes and rivers, her forests and her fields and her deep hidden mines. Wealth is the handmaid of comfort, of ease, of luxury and many other things, and these are sweet to the human heart. There has been a mad rush to lay hold upon these ready-to-hand sources of wealth. With feverish intensity men have given their brain and brawn to the development of these mighty resources and their labor has not been in vain. Wealth has been multiplied with a rapidity unprecedented in the world's life. It has been a great gain. It also has enthralled a great host. It has placed material good in the forefront, while the spirit of God and the spiritual life have been relegated to a secondary place. The result has been both natural and inevitable.

Honor, virtue and all the spiritual graces have been readily sacrificed to the insatiable greed for gain, but the handwriting of God is upon the wall. "Be sure your sin will find you out" is an old adage, but true. Man cannot continue forever to disregard God without having ultimately to reckon with Him on the basis of the deeds done in the body. Some instrument in divine Providence will vindicate the requirements of the spirit God and the spiritual life. When the finger of God through some stalwart Nathan is pointed at the sinner, it matters not whether he is a king upon his throne, he must listen to the "Thou art the man," "wherefore hast thou despised the word of the Lord to do that which is evil in His sight?" and in deep contrition of soul he must cry out for mercy and confess, "I have sinned against the Lord."

Not only have men as individuals been led to a false emphasis upon the material, and to blindness toward the spiritual, but the church herself has become too material in the expression which she has sought to give to the religious impulse. Too much of stress has been and is laid upon form and organization and not enough upon the spirit. Not until the church comes again to the side of Jacob's well and hears afresh the sweet emphasis of the Man of Galilee upon the essential spirituality of God and the supremacy and priority of the spiritual can she ever enter into her full heritage of divine power. It is high time that we should have done with the befogging and befooling effort to meet the requirements of that God who is spirit, with substitutes that are mere material foibles. It is the inners of the soul that God desires and requires. It is a damning folly to offer any substitute for that self which God has destined for eternal fellowship with Himself. Goodness, not goods; character, not cash; piety, not pretense; sincerity, not sham; these are the sacrifices acceptable to that God who is a spirit and who would be worshiped in spirit and with reality.

Another truth is placed beyond peradventure by these words of Jesus. True worship is not a matter of locality or nationality or sect. Men love to distinguish themselves by some distinguishing mark and will congratulate and flatter themselves that it in some way makes them superior to their brother man. If he is white, he congratulates himself that he is not black. If he is black, he congratulates himself that his eyes are more shiny and his teeth whiter. Doubtless demonstrations and sects have served some good ends, but if men had but learned to sweetly insist upon the truth for truth's sake, instead of lining up against their fellows in war paint and with tomahawk in hand, in utter disregard of the true spirit of the gospel, the millennium would be much nearer than it is to-day. Argue as best we may, the essence of religion is a spirit in harmony with the infinite spirit; a spirit to which reality, fact, truth, is the supreme consideration. To truly worship God is to pay to Him the homage of reverent thought and feeling, and of filial trust and love. The real temple of God is a human heart wherein the spirit of a man meets in shekinah presence the Spirit of God. Such worship and such worshipers God seeks.

Again, true worship is the great solvent of life's enigmas. In one of the psalms credited of Asaph he seeks to express the doubt and difficulty that possessed his mind when he sought to explain the prosperity of the wicked. It is surely a source of constant question to a thoughtful mind that the wicked flourish while many righteous are constrained to live in comparative if not quite penury. The question will arise, "How is it that God's material good so constantly ministers to the wicked and unworthy?" In honest doubt many hearts have asked, "Why should I worship a God who so unequally distributes His blessings?" This was the difficulty of the psalmist. He says: "Then thought I to understand this, but it was too hard for me; until I went into the sanctuary of God, then understood I the end of these men." When the psalmist entered into spiritual fellowship with God and saw the glory of that God in all His spiritual beauty there dawned upon his soul the reality of the larger truth, that God's greatest good is not material good. His richest gifts are not houses, or lands, or mines, or stocks. His richest gifts are those which bring the inner spirit of a man into perfect harmony with divine heart. No wealth or pelf can ease a restless conscience or lift the burden from a bereaved heart. Only God can fill to overflowing the human soul with that quiet and calm, that peacefulness which makes all life a song.

Does your heart cry out for God? Would you know that peace which passeth knowledge? Then be assured that these blessings can come to your life only as you recognize the eternal reality of the spiritual and placing the first emphasis upon the kingdom of God and the spiritual life seeks to live in perfect harmony with the divine mind.

The Surprises of Life.

The surprise of life always comes in finding how we have missed the things that have lain nearest to us; how we have gone far away to seek that which was close by our side all the time. Men who live best and longest are apt to come, as the result of their living, to the conviction that life is not only richer but simpler than it seemed to them at first. Men go to vast labor seeking after peace and happiness. It seems to them as if it were far away from them, as if they must go through vast and strange regions to get it. They must pile up wealth, they must see every possible danger of mishap guarded against, before they can have peace. Upon how many old men has it come with a strange surprise that peace should come to rich or poor only with contentment, and that they might as well have been content at the very end of life! They have made a long journey for their treasure, and when at last they stoop to pick it up, lo! it is shining close beside the footprint which they left when they set out to travel in a circle.—Phillips Brooks.

THE SUNDAY SCHOOL.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR DECEMBER 10.

Subject: Reading and Obeying the Law. Neh. viii., 2-18.—Golden Text, Luke xi., 28.—Memory Verses, 17, 18.—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. Studying God's word (vs. 1-8). The people were gathered in this great meeting from the surrounding country from 20,000 to 50,000 in number. It was the time of the feast of Trumpets. Trumpets were blown everywhere. They proclaimed a day of rejoicing. The people called for Ezra, the scribe, to bring out the book of the law and read to them. Here is the first mention of Ezra's name in the book of Nehemiah. It is thought that he had been absent during the past thirteen years, "perhaps working as a scribe in copying and studying, and perhaps putting in shape the book of the law. He seems to have returned at the opportune moment. This great company had gathered on purpose to hear the words of the book he had copied and probably edited."

8. "So they read." Ezra and thirteen representative men from Jerusalem, standing upon an elevated platform, read the Scriptures, in turn, for six hours or more. "In the book." Books in those days were wide strips of parchment rolled upon sticks, one at either end, so that one side was rolled up as the other was unrolled to read. The writing was in parallel columns across the strip and read from right to left. "Distinctly." So that every word could be distinctly heard. This was the first way in which they caused the people to understand. "Gave the sense." The Israelites having been lately brought out of Babylonish captivity, in which they had continued seventy years, were not only corrupt, but they had in general lost the knowledge of the ancient Hebrew to such a degree that when the book of the law was read they did not understand it. Therefore the Levites translated it into the Chaldean dialect. "Caused them to understand." They gave both a translation of the Hebrew words into the Chaldee and an exposition of the things contained in them, and of the duty incumbent upon them.

II. A day of rejoicing proclaimed (vs. 9-12).

9. "Nehemiah — the Tirshatha." Hitherto Nehemiah has called himself pechah—the ordinary word for "governor." Now he is called Tirshatha, a more honorable and reverential title for governor. The new title is among the indications that this portion of the book is written by another. "This day is holy." Mourning was unsuitable for a day of high festivity, the opening day of the civil year and of the sabbatical month, itself a sabbath or day of rest, and one to be kept by blowing of trumpets (Lev. 23:24, 25; Num. 29:1-6). It appears that the people were not only ignorant of their ancient language, but also of the rites and ceremonies of their religion, not being permitted to observe them in Babylon. "All the people wept." They realized how different their lives had been from the lives commanded by God. They had failed in personal duty. They had failed in the public worship of God. They had failed as a nation.

10. "Eat and drink." Observe God's appointment. They should testify the genuineness of their repentance by the faithfulness with which they kept the feast. "Send portions." It was an ordinance of God that in these feasts the poor should be specially and liberally provided for (Deut. 15:7-11; 16:11-15). "Neither be ye sorry." We must not be merry when God calls us to mourning. We must not afflict ourselves when God has given us occasion to rejoice. Even our sorrow for sinners must not hinder our joy in God's service. "Joy of the Lord." A consciousness of God's favor, mercy and long suffering. 11. "Levites stilled all the people." Hushed their loud lamentation. Emotion needs control when it is in danger of running into mere physical excitement.

12. "Because they — understood." They now knew God's will and their own duty, which they resolved to practice. This gave them ground of hope and trust in God's mercy, and therefore gave them great joy.

III. Directions concerning the feast of the tabernacles (vs. 13-18). During the reading of the law the people saw how they had neglected to keep the feasts as they ought and they immediately proceeded to observe the feast of the tabernacles.

14. "Found written." See Lev. 23: 33-44. "Booths." The people were commanded to leave their houses and dwell in tents or booths made of the branches of "thick trees." "Seventh month." The month Tishri or Ethanim. This was the seventh month in the sacred or ecclesiastical year and the first month in the civil year.

15. "Should publish." The meaning here is that they found it written that they should do the things mentioned in this verse. "The mount." The mount of Olives which was near by where were many olive trees and probably the other trees here mentioned. 16. "The roof." The roofs of the houses were flat and easy of access. "In their courts," etc. There were booths everywhere; the city was filled with them. 17. "Sat under the booths." They were to dwell in booths seven days, from the 15th to the 22d of the month. Their dwelling in booths commemorated their forty years' sojourn in the wilderness when they had no fixed habitations. "Since the days," etc. The meaning cannot be that this feast had not been observed since the time of Joshua, for it was kept at their return from Babylon (Ezra 3:4), but since Joshua's time the joy had never been so great as now. 18. "Solemn assembly." The first and last days of the feast were kept as sabbaths.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. Halmagen, in Roumania, possesses a public festival which is probably unique in the world. It is a little town of about 1,200 inhabitants, and on the morning of its annual fair day the population from about eighty villages come trooping in in swarms. To them go out all the young women, married or single; of Halmagen, each bearing a small flower garland and vessel of wine, and all attended by their godmothers—this last precaution is taken from motives of deference for Mrs. Grundy. As the visitors approach the young women offer to each a taste of wine and—a kiss.

THE COFFEE HEART.

It Is as Dangerous as the Tobacco or Whisky Heart.

"Coffee heart" is common to many coffee users and is liable to send the owner to his or her long home if the drug is persisted in. You can run thirty or forty yards and find out if your heart is troubled. A lady who was once a victim of the "coffee heart" writes from Oregon:

"I have been a habitual user of coffee all my life and have suffered very much in recent years from ailments which I became satisfied were directly due to the poison in the beverage, such as torpid liver and indigestion, which in turn made my complexion blotchy and muddy.

"Then my heart became affected. It would beat most rapidly just after I drank my coffee, and go below normal as the coffee effect wore off. Sometimes my pulse would go as high as 137 beats to the minute. My family were greatly alarmed at my condition, and at last mother persuaded me to begin the use of Postum Food Coffee.

"I gave up the old coffee entirely and absolutely, and made Postum my sole table beverage. This was six months ago, and all my ills, the indigestion, inactive liver and rickety heart action have passed away, and my complexion has become clear and natural. The improvement set in very soon after I made the change, just as soon as the coffee poison had time to work out of my system.

"My husband has also been greatly benefited by the use of Postum, and we find that a simple breakfast with Postum is as satisfying and more strengthening than the old heavier meal we used to have with the other kind of coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

HIGHLAND.

The Farmers' Union of Chilton County met here on Wednesday with a large attendance of delegates and members. Bro. N. A. Dobbs called the assemblage to order about 10 a. m., and after congratulating all present on the attendance, presented the County Lecturer, Rev. J. H. Thomas, who made a very able address. Business Agent W. H. Conway followed with a short speech in which he presented many facts and figures. It being about the noon hour, Bro. N. A. Dobbs, after a few words of commendation for the speakers, gave his hearers a little poetry written by the late James Tunnell, which was appropriate and should be followed by all who advocate the "cause of Labor," as follows:

"Plant corn, wheat, oats and rye,"
"Of hogs and cattle have good supply;"
"Let cotton be the finishing touch,"
"But careful be, don't plant too much."

Bro. Dobbs then adjourned the body for dinner, which the good ladies of Highland had prepared for their "brothers in the cause." It was a bountiful spread and was enjoyed by all present. After dinner the Union assembled in a business session, presided over by County Organizer Abbott, of Shelby, Bro. Dobbs being called away to perform the marriage ceremony between J. I. Bice and Miss Lula Billingsley, but as the old brother said, "Let the good work go on." The following list of delegates were in attendance, viz.: Mount Pleasant, J. Wiley Foshee, T. C. FARMERS' UNION OF AMERICA.

Texarkana, Ark., December 6.—The convention of the Farmers' Union of America today decided by a large majority to form a national organization. The work is progressing slowly. The committee to draft a constitution and by-laws is composed of J. T. Wakefield, South Carolina; H. E. Webb, Texas; R. V. Snell, Arkansas; J. W. Sanderson, Indian Territory; J. T. Brook, Tennessee; J. R. Bell, Georgia, and A. R. Cole, Louisiana. Discussion of the advisability of establishing a national newspaper organ took up much of the time, but was not settled. All business is transacted behind closed doors, and all matter for publication is given out through a press committee.

GRAND JURY REPORT.

Circuit Court, Fall Term, 1905.

"The Grand Jury investigated 73 cases and found 33 true bills. We find no flagrant violation of law in Chilton county on a large scale, except the violation of our local prohibition statute and the keeping open of stores in certain portions of the county on Sunday. As to these violations diligent inquiry and investigation has been made. On some of these charges true bills have been returned. As to other cases, the proof, while doubtless in existence, was not placed before our body in form strong enough to base a true bill upon at present. For the safety and preservation of society in our midst, this Grand Jury here and now calls upon and appeals to all good and law-abiding citizens to join the next Grand Jury in the attempt to stamp out such character of crime, which surely leads to enlarged violations.

We find our County Books and records neatly kept and preserved. However, in the limited space of time allotted to us to examine said Books and records, the inspection of same has necessarily been hardly more than casual. With the idea of impeaching the capacity and efficiency of no official, but with the view that full and complete justice may be done to all officers, as well as to the public, we recommend that a fearless, competent local accountant be employed by the County Commissioners or other proper authority to make an examination of, and report upon, the county books and records.

Our highways are in fair condition. We, however, recommend that our Court of County Commissioners take up the question of establishing a permanent local road law, on the pattern or patterns mentioned in your honor's charge, as the local conditions demand and justify. The County Poor House with its surroundings, has been examined. We find that the poor are well cared for. At present there are in the Poor house 11 inmates. We have examined our court house and jail, and we find that both are in fair condition and well preserved. The repairs on both buildings, now in course of completion, we are pleased to state, will make both structures roomy and sufficiently ample for the public needs. The Court of County Commissioners are to be commended for their diligent care in causing the erection of these additions to both buildings. A committee of our body has examined the report of the County Treasurer, and have verified the same with the Bank deposit to his credit as Treasurer, and we find the same correct. We find on hand a cash balance of $3,147.53, according to said report which we file herewith and make a part hereof. From an examination made of the bonds of our county officers, we find that the same are sufficient, so far as the solvency of the various sureties go. The bonds of the more important county officers are executed by surety companies as permitted by statute. While our duties have been tedious and laborious we, with your honor's able charge as our guide and watchword, and the constant aid of our special solicitor and bailiff, have performed our public obligations we hope with fearlessness and without favor. The return of Solicitor Bowling, after his short illness, to the performance of his duties is a source of gratification. Thanking your honor for your visit to our midst and for your able instruction, and our special solicitor for his promptness and alertness, and Bailiff Jones for his courteous attention, we wish your honor God speed and ask to be finally discharged. Respectfully submitted this the 5th day of December, 1905.

E. G. ROLLINS,
Foreman.

MAPLESVILLE MELANGE.

This has been Thanksgiving week with us. Bro. Davis held a successful meeting the week before, and a most patriotic sermon was delivered the 30th by the same minister. "America" was sung with much spirit, our singing teacher, Mr. Shaw, assisting. T. U. Crumpton invited Bro. Davis and some friends to a most delightful Thanksgiving dinner, where turkey and cranberry sauce were served with many other good things. Several turkeys came to an untimely end on Thanksgiving here. Some have wished our president would make another legal holiday. Miss Adair, our very popular teacher, went home to Uniontown during the holiday. Many of our men have attended court the past week, and we most sincerely hope all entangled in the meshes of the law would live by the Golden Rule: "Do unto others as you would have them do to you."

"O."

RANDOLPH.

December. The year is fast rounding up its work. Holiday music is in the air. Mrs. Harrison was called to Prattville Monday on account of the death of her father, Mr. Sam Gibbons. M. C. Childress, of Pleasant Grove, was in town Monday. E. G. Cofer, of Bessie, was in town last week. A new store is going up out on the east side, near Macedonia, by Lee Bearden. A few weeks ago M. J. Payne brought his little son to town with him. After their arrival here the little fellow unfortunately stepped on a large rusty nail, which penetrated his foot and caused him much suffering. A few days ago Dr. Wooley advised that he be carried to Selma for treatment. We hope for his speedy recovery. S. N. Waldrup and daughters, Mrs. J. F. Armstrong and Miss Lizzie Waldrup, were in town last week en route to Pirmingham, where they attended a meeting of the Church of the Living God. They report a glorious time, joy unspeakable, and that the services were characterized by love. The meetings were held in Fox's hall, which was packed with people. The preaching was done by C. T. Russell, editor of Zion's Watch Tower. Mr. Russell is regarded as one of the finest Bible scholars now living. A spirit of love seems to pervade all his writings. The meeting at Birmingham was attended by several from outside the State, also from various parts of the State. It was a happy gathering. We wonder why our county officers never write an article for the Union. Let us hear from all the correspondents. Tell us what is going on, and don't forget the Union is the people's paper. Yours for the people, the Union, truth and progress, "ONE OF THE BOYS."

THORSBY.

Messrs. Howard, Berlin and Hanson spent several days at the Coosa River last week. Their game consisted of one goose which Mr. Berlin was fortunate enough to shoot with a rifle. Owing to the fine weather the game did not fly low enough to enable the hunters to get good shots. Mr. and Mrs. Bice attended the wedding of one of their relatives in Shelby on last Wednesday. Mrs. Hellend is back from Austin, Minn. Her trip was a very sorrowful one, as she went to attend the funeral of her mother. Mr. G. H. Gerald was a Clanton visitor last week. Misses Gallager, Fay and Hawthorne spent Thanksgiving day and the remaining days of the week in Montgomery. Rev. Moses, of Lawrenceburg, Tenn., delivered a sermon at the Norwegian church on Thanksgiving morning. Mrs. Lane has returned to Thorsby after spending a most enjoyable visit with friends and relatives in Montgomery and other places in the southern part of the State. Mr. G. Berlin was in Clanton on the 4th. Miss Emma Gronquist was in Clanton on Monday. Mrs. John Parnell spent Monday in Montgomery. The Sunshine Society met with Miss Fay and Miss Gallager at the Hawthorne home on Tuesday afternoon. There will be preaching at the college hall both Thursday and Friday night. THANKSGIVING DAY.

We are truly thankful for what we have received in the year of our Lord 1905, for He has blessed us with a good supply of food and raiment. We don't comprehend the meaning of Thanksgiving in its true sense. Our forefathers came to this country about 320 years ago from England on account of religious freedom, and they prospered in their work. And in the autumn they were blessed with a good crop and they set apart a day in November for Thanksgiving day. And on that day they thanked the Lord for his blessings. And why we always want a turkey for a Thanksgiving dinner is because on this day their leader sent out 4 men to kill some game for the dinner, and they killed a beautiful drove of turkey, and this is why we think turkey on Thanksgiving day. Success to THE UNION. Yours truly,

J. A. JONES.

County Alms House, Dec. 2, 1905.

Mr. Editor:

Please allow me space in your valuable paper to thank the good people of Thorsby for the many good things they sent the old people here on Thanksgiving day. There were good things in abundance and a lot of beautiful pictures. I've had the pictures put up in the rooms. They will help to take the old people's thoughts off of their many pains and afflictions and put them in the way of the blessed Saviour and the world to come. The old folks have very warm feelings of gratitude for our doctor and his wife and others for the time they spent here, and we all hope they will come again soon. The inmates enjoyed the songs and prayers. "Blessed are the poor." Christ did not visit the rich, but the poor. I was sorry not to have been at home when the party came, but I divided all the things equally among the people. I trust in the Lord.

Don't Worry.

A Cincinnati woman who is noted for her amiability says, according to the Philadelphia Telegraph, that she acquired the habit of cheerfulness by saying the following lines to herself every time she felt inclined to worry:

The cow's in the hammock,
The cat's in the lake,
The children are in the garbage can—
What difference does it make?

This is a good enough formula for the woman who has children and a cow and a cat, but of what use can it be to the lady who lives in a childless flat? For her benefit we take the liberty of furnishing a few lines of our own make:

The building's afire,
A lady's who's fair
Is flirting with hubby—
But what do I care?

For the married woman who is inclined to worry and who would honestly rather not, these lilting lines may be beneficial:

My bank account is overdrawn,
The landlord's waiting for his pay;
I've lost my job, my coat's in pawn—
Who cares a cooky, anyway?

Let us all aid in spreading cheerfulness wherever and however we may.

Talking Against Time.

Up in the United States District Attorney's office, while there is a lot of hard work, there are also moments of relaxation. At such times the staff members sometimes tell good stories. The following was told after lunch one day by Assistant District Attorney Stewart:

"A young limb of the law defended an old convict on the charge of burglary. The rules of the court (it was in Massachusetts) allowed each side one hour in which to address the jury.

"The young lawyer, just before his turn came, consulted a veteran member of the bar who was in the court room.

"'How much time do you think I should take up in addressing the jury?' he asked.

"'You ought to take the full hour.'

"'The full hour! Why, I was only going to take ten minutes.'

"'You ought to take the full hour,' reiterated the old lawyer.

"'But why?'

"'Because the longer you talk the longer you will keep your client out of jail.'"—Philadelphia Telegraph.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

A Strong Presentation of the Leading Questions Demanding Legislation

STRONG ON RATE REGULATION

The Country is Enjoying a Season of Unprecedented Prosperity—Subjects That Will Engage the Attention of the People's Representatives—A Thoughtful and Exhaustive Document.

Following is in substance the annual message of President Roosevelt, as read in both houses of Congress:

Introduction.

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

The people of this country continue to enjoy great prosperity. Undoubtedly there will be ebb and flow in such prosperity, and this ebb and flow will be felt more or less by all members of the community, both by the deserving and the undeserving. Against the wrath of the Lord the wisdom of man can not avail; in times of flood or drought human ingenuity can but partially repair the disaster. A general failure of crops would hurt us. Again, if the folly of man mars the general well-being, then those who are innocent of the folly will have to pay part of the penalty incurred by those who are guilty of the folly. A panic brought on by the speculative folly of part of the business community would hurt the whole business community. But such stoppage of welfare, though it might be severe, would not be lasting. In the long run the one vital factor in the permanent prosperity of the country is the high individual character of the average American worker, the average American citizen, no matter whether his work be mental or manual, whether he be farmer or wage-worker, business man or professional man.

In our industrial and social system the interests of all men are so closely intertwined that in the immense majority of cases a straight-dealing man who by his efficiency, by his ingenuity and industry, benefits himself must also benefit others. Normally the man of great productive capacity who becomes rich by guiding the labor of many other men does so by enabling them to produce more than they could pr luce without his guidance; and both he and they share in the benefit, which comes also to the public at large. The superficial fact that the sharing may be unequal must never blind us to the underlying fact that there is this sharing, and that the benefit comes in some degress to each man concerned. Normally the wage-worker, the man of small means, and the average consumer, as well as the average producer, are all alike helped by making conditions such that the man of exceptional business ability receives an exceptional reward for his ability. Something can be done by legislation to help the general prosperity; but no such help of a permanently beneficial character can be given to the less able and less fortunate, save as the results of a policy which shall inure to the advantage of all industrious and efficient people who act decently; and this is only another way of saying that any benefit which comes to the less able and less fortunate must of necessity come even more to the more able and more fortunate. If, therefore, the less fortunate man is moved by envy of his more fortunate brother to strike at the conditions under which they have both, though unequally, prospered, the result will assuredly be that while damage may come to the one struck at it will visit with an even heavier load the one who strikes the blow. Taken as a whole we must all go up or go down together.

Corporations.

Yet, while not merely admitting, but insisting upon this, it is also true that where there is no governmental restraint or supervision some of the exceptional men use their energies not in ways that are for the common good, but in ways which tell against this common good. The fortunes amassed through corporate organization are now so large, and vest such power in those that wield them, as to make it a matter of necessity to give to the sovereign—that is, to the Government, which represents the people as a whole—some effective power of supervision over their corporate use. In order to insure a healthy social and industrial life, every big corporation should be held responsible by, and be accountable to, some sovereign strong enough to control its conduct. I am in no sense hostile to corporations. This is an age of combination, and any effort to prevent all combination will be not only useless, but in the end vicious, because of the contempt for law which the failure to enforce law inevitably produces. We should, moreover, recognize in cordial and ample fashion the immense good effected by corporate agencies in a country such as ours, and the wealth of intellect, energy, and fidelity devoted to their service, and therefore normally to the service of the public, by their officers and directors. The corporation has come to stay, just as the trade union has come to stay. Each can do and has done great good. Each should be favored so long as it does good. But each should be sharply checked where it acts against law and justice. So long as the finances of the Nation are kept upon an honest basis no other question of internal economy with which the Congress has the power to deal begins to approach in importance the matter of endeavoring to secure proper industrial conditions under which the individuals—and especially the great corporations—doing an interstate business are to act. The makers of our National Constitution provided especially that the regulation of interstate commerce should come within the sphere of the General Government. The arguments in favor of their taking this stand were even then overwhelming. But they are far stronger to-day, in view of the enormous development of great business agencies, usually corporate in form. Experience has shown conclusively that it is useless to try to get any adequate regulation and supervision of these great corporations by State action. Such regulation and supervision can only be effectively exercised by a sovereign whose jurisdiction is coextensive with the field of work of the corporations—that is, by the National Government.

I am well aware of the difficulties of the legislation that I am suggesting, and of the need of temperate and cautious action in securing it. I should emphatically protest against improperly radical or hasty action. The first thing to do is to deal with the great corporations engaged in the business of interstate transportation. As I said in my Message of December 6 last, the immediate and most pressing need, so far as legislation is concerned, is the enactment into law of some scheme to secure to the agents of the Government such supervision and regulation of the rates charged by the railroads of the country engaged in interstate traffic as shall summarily and effectively prevent the imposition of unjust or unreasonable rates. It must include putting a complete stop to rebates in every shape and form. This power to regulate rates, like all similar powers over the business world, should be exercised with modification, caution and self-restraint; but it should exist, so that it can be effectively exercised when the need trises.

The first consideration to be kept in mind is that the power should be affirmative and should be given to some administrative body created by the Congress.

Illegal transactions often occur under the forms of law. It has often occurred that a shipper has been told by a traffic officer to buy a large quantity of some commodity and then after it has been bought an open reduction is made in rate take effect immediately, the arangement resulting to the damage of all their competitors; for it must not be forgotten that the big shippers are at least as much to blame as any railroad in the matter of rebates. The law should make it clear so that nobody can fail to understand that any kind of commission paid on freight shipments, whether in this form or in the form of fictitious damages, or of a concession a fress pass, reduced passenger rate, or payment of brokerage, is illegal.

All private-car lines, industrial roads, refrigerator charges, and the like should be expressly put under the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission or some similar body so far as rates, and agreements practically affecting rates, are concerned. The private-car owners and the owners of industrial railroads are entitled to a fair and reasonable compensation on their investment, but neither private cars nor industrial railroads nor spur tracks should be utilized as devices for securing preferential rates. A rebate in icing charges, or in mileage, or in a division of the rate for refrigerating charges is just as pernicious as a rebate in any other way. No lower rate should apply on goods imported than actually obtains on domestic goods from the American seaboard to destination except in cities where water competition is the controlling influence. There should be publicity of the accounts of common carriers; no common carrier engaged in interstate business should keep any books or memoranda other than those reported pursuant to law or regulation, and these books or memoranda should be open to the inspection of the Government. Only in this way can violations or evasions of the law be surely detected. A system of examination of railroad accounts should be provided similar to that now conducted into the national banks by the bank examiners; a few first-class railroad accountants, if they had proper direction and proper authority to inspect books and papers, could accomplish much in preventing willful violations of the law.

I urge upon the Congress the need of providing for expeditious action by the Interstate Commerce Commission in all these matters, whether in regulating rates for transportation or for storing or handling property or commodities in transit. The history of the cases litigated under the present commerce act shows that its efficacy has been to a great degree destroyed by the weapon of delay, almost the most formidable weapon in the hands of those whose purpose it is to violate the law.

Safety Appliances.

In my annual Message to the Fifty-eighth Congress, at its third session I called attention to the necessity for legislation requiring the use of block signals upon railroads engaged in interstate commerce. The number of serious collisions upon unblocked roads that have occurred within the past year adds force to the recommendation then made. The Congress should provide, by appropriate legislation, for the introduction of block signals upon all railroads engaged in interstate commerce at the earliest practicable date, as a measure of increased safety to the traveling public.

Hours of Labor of Railroad Employees.

The excessive hours of labor to which railroad employees in train service are in many cases subjected is also a matter which may well engage the serious attention of the Congress. The strain, both mental and physical, upon those who are engaged in the movement and operation of railroad trains under modern conditions is perhaps greater than that which exists in any other industry, and if there are any reasons for limiting by law the hours of labor in any employment, they certainly apply with peculiar force to the employment of those upon whose vigilance and alertness in the performance of their duties the safety of all who travel by rail depends.

Labor.

The National Government has as a rule but little occasion to deal with the formidable group of problems connected more or less directly with what is known as the labor question, for in the great majority of cases these problems must be dealt with by the State and municipal authorities and not by the National Government. The National Government has control of the District of Columbia, however, and it should see to it that the City of Washington is made a model city in all respects, both as regards parks, public grounds, proper regulation of the system of housing so as to do away with the evils of alley tenements, a proper system of education, a proper system of dealing with truancy and juvenile offenders, a proper handling of the charitable work of the District. Moreover, there should be proper factory laws to prevent all abusea in the employment of women and children in the District. These will be useful chiefly as object lessons, but even this limited amount of usefulness would be of real national value.

There has been demand for depriving courts of the power to issue injunctions in labor disputes. Such special limitation of the equity powers of our courts would be most unwise. It is true that some judges have misused this power; but this does not justify a denial of the power any more than an improper exercise of the power to call a strike by a labor leader would justify the denial of the right to strike.

The Department of Commerce and Labor should also make a thorough investigation of the condition of women in industry. Over five million American women are now engaged in gainful occupations; yet there is an almost complete dearth of data upon which to base any trustworthy conclusions as regards a subject as important as it is vast and complicated. There is need of full knowledge on which to base action looking toward State and municipal legislation for the protection or working women. The introduction of women into industry is working change and disturbance in the domestic and social life of the Nation.

Insurance.

The great insurance companies afford striking examples of corporations whose business has extended so far beyond the jurisdiction of the State which created them as to preclude strict enforcement of supervision and regulation by the parent States. In my last annual Message, I recommended "that the Congress carefully consider whether the power of the Bureau of Corporations can not constitutionally be extended to cover interstate transactions in insurance." Recent events have emphasized the importance of an early and exhaustive consideration of this question, to see whether it is not possible to furnish better safeguards than the several States have been able to furnish against corruption of the flagrant kind which has been exposed. It has been only too clearly shown that certain of the men at the head of these large corporations take but small note of the ethical distinction between honesty and dishonesty; they draw the line only this side of what may be called law-honesty, the kind of honesty necessary in order to avoid falling into the clutches of the law. Of course the only complete remedy for this condition must be found in an aroused public conscience, a higher sense of ethical conduct in the community at large, and especially among business men and in the great profession of the law, and in the growth of a spirit which condemns all dishonesty, whether in rich man or in poor man, whether it takes the shape of bribery or of blackmail. But much can be done by legislation which is not only drastic but practical.

The Revenues.

There is more need of stability than of the atempt to attain an ideal perfection in the methods of raising revenue; and the shock and strain to the business world certain to attend any serious change in these methods render such change inadvisable unless for grave reason. It is not possible to lay down any general rule by which to determine the moment when the reasons for will outweigh those against such a change. Much must depend, not merely on the needs, but on the desires, of the people as a whole; for needs and desires are not necessarily identical. Of course no change can be made on lines beneficial to, or desired by, one section or one State only. There must be something like a general agreement among the citizens of the several States, as represented in the Congress, that the change is needed and desired in the interest of the people as a whole; and there should then be a sincere, intelligent, and disinterested effort to make it in such shape as will combine, so far as possible, the maximum of good to the people at large with the minimum of necessary diregard for the special interests of localities or classes. But in time of peace the revenue must on the average, taking a series of years together, equal the expenditures or else the revenues must be increased. Last year there was a deficit. Unless our expenditures can be kept within the revenues then our revenue laws must be readjusted.

Economy in Exepnditures.

I earnestly recommend to the Congress the need of economy and to this end of a rigid scrutiny of appropriations. As examples merely, I call your attention to one of two specific matters. All unnecessary offices should be abolished. The Commissioner of the General Land Office recommends the abolishment of the office of receiver of public moneys for United States land offices.

Yet, in speaking of ecenomy, I must in no wise be understood as advocating the false economy which is in the end the worst extravagance. To cut down on the Navy, for instance, would be a crime against the Nation. To fail to push forward all work on the Panama Canal would be as great a folly.

At various times I have instituted investigations into the organization and conduct of the business of the Executive Departments. While none of these inquiries have yet progressed far enough to warrant final conclusions, they have already confirmed and emphasized the general impression that the organization of the Departments is often faulty in principle and wasteful in results, while many of their business methods are artiquidated and inefficient. There is every reason why our executive governmental machinery should be at least as well planned, economical, and efficient as the best machinery of the great business organizations, which at present is not the case.

Monroe Doctrine.

One of the most effective instruments for peace is the Monroe Doctrine as it has been and is being gradually developed by this Nation and accepted by other nations. No other policy could have been as efficient in promoting peace in the Western Hemisphere and in giving to each nation thereon the chance to develop along its own lines. If we had refused to apply the Doctrine to changing conditions it would now be completely outworn, would not meet any of the needs of the present day, and indeed would probably by this time have sunk into complete oblivion. It is useful at home, and is meeting with recognition abroad because we have adapted our application of it to meet the growing and changing needs of our Hemisphere. When we announce a policy, such as the Monroe Doctrine, we thereby commit ourselves to the consequences of the policy, and those consequences from time to time alter. It is out of the question to claim a right and yet shirk the responsibility for its exercise. Not only we, but all American Republics who are benefitted by the existence of the Doctrine, must recognize the obligations each nation is under as regards foreign peoples no less than its duty to insist upon its own rights.

That our rights and interests are deeply concerned in the maintenance of the Doctrine is as clear as hardly to need argument. This is especially true in view of the construction of the Panama Canal. As a mere mater of self-defense we must exercise a close watch over the approaches to this canal; and this means that we must be thoroughly alive to our interests in the Caribbean Sea.

Santo Domingo.

Santo Domingo, in her turn, has now made an appeal to us to help her, and not only every principle of wisdom but every generous instinct within us bids us respond to the appeal. It is not of the slightest consequence whether we grant the aid needed by Santo Domingo as an incident to the wise development of the Monroe Doctrine, or because we regard the case of Santo Domingo as standing wholly by itself, and to be treated as such, and not on general principles or with any reference to the Monroe Doctrine.

Army and Navy.

We cannot consider the question of our foreign policy without at the same time treating of the Army and the Navy. We now have a very small army—indeed, one well-nigh infinitesimal when compared with the army of any other large nation. Of course the Army we do have should be as nearly perfect of its kind and for its size as possible. I do not believe that any army in the world has a better average of enlisted man or a better type of junior officer; but the Army should be trained to act effectively in a mass. Provision should be made by sufficient appropriations for maneuvers of a practical kind so that the troops may learn how to take care of themselves under actual service conditions; every march for instance, being made with the soldier loaded exactly as he would be in active campaign. The generals and colonels would thereby have opportunity of handling regiments, brigades, and divisions, and the commisary and medical departments would be tested in the field. Provision should be made for the exercise at least of a brigade and by preefrence of a division in marching and embarking at some point and continuing its march. The number of posts in which the Army is kept in time of peace should be matrially diminshed and the posts that are left made correspondingly larger. No local interests should be allowed to stand in the way of assembling the greater part of the troops which would at need form our field armies in stations of such size as will permit the best training to be given to the personnel of all grades, including the high officers and staff officers. To accomplish this end we must have not company or regimental garrisons, btu brigade and division garrisons.

Federal Elections.

The President touches upon the question of Federal elections, quoting the well known constitutional provision that Congress shall be the final judge of the qualification of its own members. He also declares strongly against all forms of corruption and expresses regret at the growing tendency to increase expenses in connection with the conduct of political campaigns. Briefly, he advocates the greatest possible purity of the ballot and the fulest freedom of the exercise of the elective franchise consistent with good government.

Immigration.

Thes ubject of immigration is treated by Mr. Roosevelt in a particularly able and thoughtful manner. The tendency of foreigners to congregate in sections of the country already congested with people is deplored. High-class foreigners are desirable and are welcomed, but only those with tendencies towards good citizenship and of industrious and law-abiding habits will add to the general welfare of the nation. It is pointed out that our farming sections need labor, and that all who come with a will to work will find a ready welcome.

Criminal Laws.

In my last Message I asked the attention of the Congress to the urgent need of action to make our criminal law more effective; and I most earnestly request that you pay heed to the report of the Aattorney-General on this subject. Centuries ago it was especially needful to throw every safeguard round the accused. Such danger then was lest he should be wronged by the state. The danger is now exactly the reverse.

Breaches of Trust in Public Service.

There seems to be no statute of the United States which provides for the punishment of a United States attorney or other officer of the Government who corruptly agrees to wrongfully do or wrongfully refrain from doing any act when the consideration for such corrupt agreement is other than one possessing money value. This ought to be remedied by appropriate legislation.

Public Land Laws.

Once again I call your attention to the condition of the public-land laws. Recent developments have given new urgency to the need for such changes as will fit these laws to actual present conditions. The honest disposal and right use of the remaining public lands is of fundamental importance. The iniquitous methods by which the monopolizing of the public lands is being brought about under the present laws are becoming more generally known, but the existing laws do not furnish effective remedies. The recommendations of the Public Lands Commission upon this subject are wise and should be given effect.

The Jamestown Tercentennial.

This enterprise is highly commended by the President, who heartily sets the seal of his approval upon everything Congress may see fit to do to assist in making it a success.

Our Island Possessions.

Good work has been done by our government in all the territorial acquired by our recent war with Spain. Order is rapidly being brough about and the people are becoming contented and prosperous.

The Hague Conference.

This tribunal, established for the purpose of arbitrating matters of international difference, has already accomplished much good. Matters of armament and [illegible] and also the duties of neutrals [illegible] in time of war have been [illegible] up and discussed before this high tribunal, and a better understanding between the nations of the earth has already grown out of the meetings.

National Park Reservations.

The President recommends to the Congress the enlargement of the bounds of the Yellowstone National Park, the protection of the Niagara Falls and the establishment of such other park reservations as congress may see fit to set apart. The great benefits of these national parks to science as well as to the health and happiness of the people is pointed out.

Merchant Marine.

To the spread of our trade on peace and the defense of our flag in war s great and prosperous merchant marine is indispensible. We should have ships of our own and seamen of our own to convey our goods to neutral markets, and in case of need to reenforce our battle line. It can not but be a source of regret and uneasiness to us that the lines of communication with out sister republics of South America should be chiefly under foreign control.

Pensions.

The soldier who did his duty in the time of war should receive the benefits of a grateful country, but here as elsewhere, a strict watch should be kept to prevent fraud.

Mississippi Levees.

The National Government already does something in connection with the construction and maintenance of the great system of levees along the lower course of the Mississippi; in my judgment it should do much more.

The Civil Service.

The civil service law has been on the statute books for twenty-two years. Every President and a vast majority of heads of departments who have been in office during that period have favored a gradual extension of the merit system. The more thoroughly its principles have been understood, the greater has been the favor with which the law has been regarded by administrative officers. Any attempt to [illegible] the great executive departments of the Government without the law would inevitably result in chaos. The Civil Service Commissioners are doing excellent work; and their compensation is inadequate considering the service they perform.

Admission to Statehood.

I recommend that Indian Territory and Oklahoma be admitted as one State and that Mexico and Arizona be admitted as one State. There is no obligation upon us to treat territorial subdivisions, which are matters of convenience only, as binding us on the question of admission to statehood.

Panama Canal.

The treatment between the United States and the Republic of Panama, under which the construction of the Panama Canal was made possible, went into effect with its ratification by the United States on April 23, 1904, on payment of $40,000,000 to that company. On April 1, 1905, the Commission was reorganized and it now consists of Theodore P. Shonts, chairman, Charles E. Magoon, Admiral Mordecai T. Endicott, Brig. Gen. Peter C. Hains, and Col. Oswald H. Ernst.

The Department of State.

I recommend more adequate provision than has been made heretofore for the work of the Department of State. Within a few years there has been a very great increase in the amount and importance of the work to be done by that Department, both in Washington and abroad. This has been caused by the great increase of our foreign trade, the increase of wealth among our people, which enables them to travel more generally than heretofore, the increase of American capital which is seeking investment in foreign countries, and the growth of our power and weight in the councils of the civilized world.

Conclusion.

Suitable provision should be made for the expense of keeping our diplomatic officers more fully informed of what is being done from day to day in progress of our diplomatic affairs with other countries. The lack of such information, caused by insufficient appropriations available for cable tolls and for clerical and mesenger service, frequently puts our officers at a great disadvantage and detructs from their usefulness. The salary list should be readjusted. It does not now correspond either to the importance of the service to be rendered and the degrees of ability and experience required in the different positions, or to the difference in the cost of living. In many cases the salaries are quite inadequate.

FEW CUTTING REMARKS

The purpose of a saw is to cut. It should cut easily, cut cleanly, and cut with every movement.

I prefer an Atkins Saw. Its blade is "Silver Steel", recognized the world over as the finest crucible steel ever made in ancient or modern times. It is hard, close-grained and tough. It holds a sharp cutting edge longer than any other Saw. Its blade tapers perfectly from thick to thin, from handle to tip. Thus it makes leeway for itself, runs easily and does not buckle. Its temper is perfect. When bent by a crooked cut, it springs into shape without kinking. The Atkins Saw cuts—and does it best of any.

We make all types and sizes of saws, but only one grade—the best.

A Letter From the Ex-Governor of Oregon.

The ex-Governor of Oregon is an ardent admirer of Peruna. He keeps it continually in the house. In a letter to Dr. Hartman, he says:

STATE OF OREGON,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, O.:

Dear Sirs—I have had occasion to use your Peruna medicine in my family for colds, and it proved to be an excellent remedy. I have not had occasion to use it for other ailments.

Yours very truly, W. M. Lord.

It will be noticed that the Governor says he has not had occasion to use Peruna for other ailments. The reason for this is, most other ailments begin with a cold.

FEW CUTTING REMARKS

The purpose of a saw is to cut. It should cut easily, cut cleanly, cut with every movement.
I prefer an Atkins Saw. Its blade ("Silver Steel"), recognized the world over as the finest crucible steel ever made in ancient or modern times. It is hard, close-grained and tough. It holds a sharp cutting edge longer than any other Saw. Its blade tapers perfectly from thick to thin, from handle to tip. Thus it makes leeway for itself, runs easily and does not buckle. Its temper is perfect. When bent by a crooked log, it springs into shape without kinking. The Atkins saw cuts—and does it best of any. We make all types and sizes of saws, but only one grade—the best.
Atkins Saws, Corn Knives, Perfection Floor Scrapers, etc., are sold by all good hardware dealers. Catalogue on request.

Duel on Bicycles.

Spain has developed a novelty in dueling. It may be described as the duel awheel, and is fought on bicycles. Two young men of Grenada, named Percy and Marcus, have originated the idea. We are not told the cause of the quarrel, but the disputants, who are ardent cyclists, agreed to fight it out with knives, or navagas, on their machines. In the first encounter Percy prove his knife through his adversary's arm, but in the third set-to Marcus avenged himself by plunging his blade into Percy's right lung. Death took place shortly afterward.

I often had to get up a dozen times at night to urinate. Retention set in, and I was obliged to use the catheter. I took to my bed, and the doctors failing to help, began using Doan's Kidney Pills. The urine soon came freely again, and the pain gradually disappeared. I have been cured eight years, and though over 70, am as active as a boy."

SOCIETY IN BUSINESS

Fashionable Folk Who Have Entered the World of Trade.

Royalty often assumes the role of a shop assistant. Princess Louise, Duchess of Argyl, takes endless pains in suiting her bazaar customers; the Duchess of Connaught also does brisk business and Princess Christian is a tireless worker.

It is now nearly twenty years ago since the late Lady Granville Gordon started a hat shop. Mrs. Maxwell Heron, wife of a well-known Scotch laird, joined the famous dressmaking business of Elise in Regent street. Mrs. Jack Cumming tried the same experiment in Dover street, under the name of "Machinka."

Countess Fabbricotti, a pretty Englishwoman, is among the latest recruits to our society milliners; and among others are Mrs. "Bertie" Dormer, cousin to Lord Dormer, and Lady Rachel Byng, daughter of Lord Strafford.

The Hon. Algernon Bourke, brother of the Earl of Mayo, has started a bric-a-brac business in Venice; the Hon. Mrs. Granville Knox—who began her business career as a manicurist—was until quite lately in a smart shop that sold Italian furniture in London.

It is an open secret that Lady Wimborne is the chief proprietor of a book shop in Dover street. Then Mrs. Patrick Heron Maxwell runs a florist's business with success, and Miss Kerr, an unmarried daughter of the late Lord Fred.rick Kerr, keeps a servants' registry in Lower Belgrave street. The Countess of Warwick no longer maintains a lingerie shop in Bond street, but the hostel at Reading now affords ample proof of her plucky, enterprising character. The Duchess of Abercorn has a creamery near Baronscourt; Lady Essex is said to have started a laundry near London, and the Hon. Frances Wolseley has a school for women gardeners at Glynde, in Sussex.

The Earl of Pembroke is a carpet manufacturer at Wilton. Lord Rayleigh has been for some years in the milk trade, and so is a Mr. Dormer, son of the Hon. Hubert Dormer. The Earl of Harrington owns a small shop in Craig's Court, Charing Cross, for the sale of fruit and vegetables, which arrive daily from Elvaston Castle, his place in Derbyshire; and the name of the Marquis of Londonderry is often to be seen on coal carts in the metropolis. Sir Edmund Elton manufactures art pottery.

The Man and the Magnate.

There was once an ordinary man and a magnate.

The first time the ordinary man met the magnate he looked upon him with considerable awe.

"Ah," he said to himself, "if I only had all his money, how great a man I should think myself."

The second time the ordinary man met the magnate, his opinion of him was not so great.

"I cannot," he said, "but help think that his talents have been much exaggerated. He's not nearly so bright as I thought."

The third time he perceived that the magnate had as many faults as he had.

And when they had been associated together for some time, the ordinary man at last exclaimed:

"Alas! The possession of so much wealth certainly means a loss of virtue. I am so superior to him that I am filled with remorse to think I ever could have been so deceived in believing he was so great. Nevertheless, I shall continue to be friendly and subservient to him, for there's no telling at just what moment I may be able to get some of his money away from him."

Romantic Necklace Story.

There is a romantic story attaching to the great rope of pearls worn by the Princess Fredericka of Hanover at recent functions. They are magnificent specimens and very old. Centuries ago a Princess of the house loved them so that they were buried with her. But in process of time the great grief of her relatives grew gradually fainter and fainter until they began to whisper what a shame it was that such glorious jewels should be wasted. One day the Princess' tomb was opened and the pearl necklace was taken from her neck. But the pearls were spoiled; they had lost their lustre and beauty. The new owner wept over them and dreamed about them, and her dream told her that three generations of lovely women would have to wear them before their lustre returned. Three lovely Princesses did wear them, and they are now pearls without peers.—Boston Transcript.

ULCERS FOR THIRTY YEARS

Painful Eruptions From Knees to Feet Seemed Incurable—Cuticura Ends Misery.

Another of those remarkable cures by Cuticura, after doctors and all else had failed, is testified to by Mr. M. C. Moss, of Gainesville, Texas, in the following letter: "For over thirty years I suffered from painful ulcers and an eruption from my knees to feet, and could find neither doctors nor medicine to help me until I used Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, which cured me in six months. They helped me the very first time I used them, and I am glad to write this so that others suffering as I did may be saved from misery."

A Souchong tea compressed into cakes almost brick-like in hardness is supplied to Russian officers in Manchuria. It is creamy and sweet in taste, requiring less sugar than ordinary tea, and the infusion is made by simply putting into a cup a piece the size of a thimble and pouring in hot water. It is suggested that similar cakes would be a luxury to cyclists and other travelers.

Bees and Flowers.

Mlle. J. Wery, a Belgian naturalist, has announced the results of new experiments on the nature of the attraction of flowers for bees. She finds that perfume by itself offers little attraction. Artificial flowers are as attractive as national ones if both are put under glass shades. Brilliantly colored flowers offer much greater attraction when entire than when the petals or other parts have been cut away. Mlle. Wery is of opinion that bees are guided more by sight than by smell when they are after honey.

JOYS OF MATERNITY

A WOMAN'S BEST HOPES REALIZED

Mrs. Potts Tells How Women Should Prepare for Motherhood

The darkest days of husband and wife are when they come to look forward to childless and lonely old age.

Many a wife has found herself incapable of motherhood owing to a displacement of the womb or lack of strength in the generative organs.

Mrs. Anna Potts

Frequent backache and distressing pains, accompanied by offensive discharges and generally by irregular and scanty menstruation indicate a displacement or nerve degeneration of the womb and surrounding organs.

The question that troubles women is how can a woman who has some female trouble bear healthy children?

Mrs. Anna Potts, of 510 Park Avenue, Hot Springs, Ark., writes:

"My Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

During the early part of my married life I was delicate in health; both my husband and I were very anxious for a child to bless our home, but I had two miscarriages, and could not carry a child to maturity. A neighbor who had been cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advised me to try it. I did so and soon felt that I was growing stronger, my headaches and backaches left me, I had no more bearing-down pains, and felt like a new woman. Within a year I became the mother of a strong, healthy child, the joy of our home. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is certainly a splendid remedy, and I wish every woman who wants to become a mother would try it."

Actual sterility in woman is very rare. If any woman thinks she is sterile, let her try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free to expectant or would-be mothers.

Loveman, Joseph & Loeb

Agricultural Progress

By F. W. Hewes.

THE farm gardens, "market gardens" and "truck gardens" of today are the producers of a multitude of "miscellaneous vegetables" almost unknown fifty years ago. In the census of 1890 the large increase in garden products was recognized, and a systematic count of their bulk and value was made. It is possible, therefore, to make a ten-year comparison of the increase of such products, and this records the remarkable increase of from 190 percent to 400 percent in the five several divisions of the country. The North Atlantic states had a well-developed industry in "garden products" before 1890, which accounts for its relatively low increase. However, 190 percent in ten years, while the population increased only a trifle over 20 percent, is amazing.

Could our great granddaddies, who thought tomatoes poisonous, and our greatgrandmothers, who grew them as ornamental plants in window pots, under the attractive name of "love apples," come back and realize that over 30,000,000 bushels of the pretty, poisonous vegetables are eaten as a common and healthful food, they would surely realize that time works wonderful changes. Another interesting statement is that the lettuce crop of the South has so increased that in the spring of this year North Carolina sent twenty carloads of that vegetable North in a single day.

Thirty-five years ago celery was a rarity even on hotel tables, and was used by few families, even of wealth. Today it is a common edible, occupying thousands of acres in Michigan, Ohio and New York. One firm has celery farms in Michigan, Florida and California, and because of the variety of the seasons it is engaged in shipping celery by the carload the whole year round. Twenty-two million bushels of radishes and 12,000,000 bushels of asparagus are the figures for the crops of these vegetables.—Harper's Weekly.

Diving Bell of 200 Years Ago.

It was nearly 200 years ago that Edward Halley constructed what is often referred to as the first diving bell, although the apparatus must have been much like that which was used in the presence of Charles V.

The principles of the diving bell is simple. An inverted jar if sunk in the water retains air at its top; and if there is enough air men may live and breathe and work there, and keep dry.

Dr. Halley's diving bell was a large wooden chamber, open at the bottom, and loaded there with lead to prevent it from leaning in the water. Pieces of glass set in the roof furnished light. Air was supplied by various methods; for leaded casks full of air were sent down, bung downward. Tapping the barrel, water would rush into it and drive out the air to the man in the bell chamber.

The clock in Exeter Cathedral, England, is 700 years old.

Parisian Pet Dog Market.

World from Paris tells us that the pet dog market is booming. There never was a better season says M. Aaron, a well-known dealer, and among the most numerous purchaser of Parisian women ready to embark for lands, toy spaniels and Pekin are Asiatic. What is most fashionable in pekt dogs is, according to the dealer, what contrasts best with the dark color of feminine apparel donned for the colder weather.

FLYER JUMPS THE TRACK

Express of Jersey Central Railroad Wrecked Near Mauch Chunk, Pa.

HEROISM OF TRAIN BRAKEMAN

Walks Two Miles With Both Arms Broken to Notify Nearest Signal-Towerman of the Accident—Flange on the Drive-Wheel Caused the Cars to Leave the Track on a Curve.

Scranton, Pa.—Two trainmen were killed and eighteen passengers were hurt, only two of them seriously, in the wreck of the Philadelphia flyer on the Central Railroad of New Jersey near Stony Brook. The train plunged over an embankment late at night, the locomotive and one car going into the river, and at first it was supposed that the list of casualties would reach a hundred.

The most seriously injured are a man whose thigh was broken and a boy with a fractured skull. When the train jumped the track the locomotive and two cars crashed down a thirty-foot embankment. The locomotive and the combination car fell into the river and the Pullman car landed on end on the brink of the stream.

As the train went over the embankment two telegraph poles were torn down and the wires broken, cutting off all communication. It was a four-mile walk to the nearest telegraph station on the other side of the river, at Penn Haven Junction. The remote place where the wreck occurred, the broken wires and the excitement that followed the order for the doctors caused wild rumors that the entire train had been hurled into the river and that 80 or 100 had been killed. Not until 2 o'clock in the morning was the extent of the wreck ascertained.

The dead are Clarence Detro, of Ashley, an engineer, who was riding on the locomotive of the train and returning to his work at Bethlehem after spending the day with his family at Ashley, and Fireman John Leibert, of Mauch Chunk.

Some of the injured are: Engineer Willis, was badly scalded and bruised; Philip Reilly, a baggagemaster; Galvin Swisher, a newsboy, and Thomas Snyder, a conductor.

The locomotive, while running about thirty miles an hour, jumped the track, evidently owing to a broken flange on one of the driving wheels. It plunged across the westbound track.

The train left Wilkes-Barre at 6.30 o'clock at night, and the first news of the accident was obtained when a brakeman, bleeding and half dead, staggered into the signal operator's tower at Penn Haven Junction. He had walked two miles with both arms broken. The operator telegraphed to Mauch Chunk and a wrecking crew and hospital car were immediately sent, with three physicians and all the help that could be gathered.

Some of the eighteen injured passengers were taken to the railroad's hospital at Bethlehem, Pa.

The engineer and fireman were pinned in the wreck of the locomotive and crushed to death. An upset stove set the cars on fire. The passengers who were unhurt took all the wounded out of the wreck and then fought the flames. By the time the wreckers arrived the fire was under control and the wounded passengers were being cared for on the bank of the stream.

Many persons cut by broken glass and bruised by the crashing timbers refused to go to the hospital and left on a special train that was sent to carry the passengers on their way.

Two physicians were among the uninjured on the wrecked train and they did the best they could without the aid of bandages to dress the wounds of their less fortunate fellow passengers.

The flyer had left White Haven twenty minutes late and was running at a good rate of speed toward Mauch Chunk, but it was said that no attempt was being made to make up the lost time. The wreck occurred on a stretch of level double track in a cut on the mountainside. There are several curves there and the road has a rule against fast running. On the opposite side of the river are the tracks of the Lehigh Valley road.

Traffic on the main line of the Central of New Jersey was laid up for some time, and trains were sent over the tracks of the Lehigh Valley, connection being made at Penn Haven Junction.

Shooting at Kellerman.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—A shooting affair took place up at Kellerman last Thursday which resulted in two men getting shot. It seems that W. T. Atchley had sworn out a warrant for Alex Sullivan's children. When Sullivan saw Atchley he demanded that the warrant be withdrawn, and from this a quarrel ensued, in which the shooting took place with the result mentioned. Sullivan was shot in the leg with a pistol, and J. R. Atchley, a brother of the other Atchley, was shot in the body with a load of bird shot. Neither of the men are seriously wounded. There has been a warrant sworn out for Sullivan charging him with assault with intent to murder.

Comer in Tuscaloosa.

The audience that gathered to greet the distinguished visitor was moderately large and often grew enthusiastic with the earnest talk that Mr. Comer made. His address was along the usual lines—railroad rate reform. Mr. Comer, judging from his address here is making an effort to get the candidates for the legislature to fall in line with his views. It seems that the gubernatorial candidate will make a fight for the legislature.

Baggage Master in Trouble.

Birmingham, Ala.—Charged with embezzling the trunk of T. F. Wheberly, secretary-treasurer of the Wheberly & Thomas Hardware Company upon his return from Europe last August, M. A. Black, who is under arrest charged with the crime, is a resident of Austell, Ga., although he had roomed in Birmingham also until his arrest. It is also rumored that two other arrests have been made in connection with the trunk's disappearance, though authorities both here and in Georgia are extremely reticent about the whole matter.

Black, a baggage master on the Southern Railway between here and Atlanta, is in the tower in the lower city. The contents of the trunk are said to have been valued at $1,400. Drank Forty-eight Glasses of Corn.

Birmingham, Ala.—Tom Smith, a young negro, broke the world's record Friday night for drinking "old corn," but he forfeited his life in doing so. According to statements of eye-witnesses the man drank forty-eight whisky glasses full of corn whisky and died a few hours afterwards.

Game Preserve Planned.

Decatur, Ala.—Northern and eastern and local capitalists are making arrangements looking to the purchasing of several thousand acres of barren lands in Northern Alabama for a game preserve.

These barren lands lie about twenty miles north of this city and extend from a point in Southern Tennessee southward into Alabama for a distance of about fifteen miles. They extend about twenty-five miles east and west and embrace something like 375 square miles, or about 240,000 acres.

The soil is of a white sand and the region is covered by a dense growth of small scrubby blackjack oaks. In some places the underbrush is so dense that it is alomst impossible for man or horse to penetrate. Several small creeks flow through the region, and it would make an ideal game preserve. But little of the land has ever been settled.

Only a few years ago deer, wild turkey, and black bear and smaller game could be found in these barrens in great quantities. Even now a few deer and wild turkeys and other game can be found there.

It is the purpose of the company who propose to buy this land to stock it with wild game of all kinds.

The United States government is contemplating purchasing a large block of land in Northwestern Alabama for a forestry reserve. In that portion of the state there are thousands of acres of timber lands which have never been touched by the woodman's ax.

Alabama Port Hotel Burned.

Mobile, Ala.—At Alabama Port, Mobile county, the Bay Shore Hotel, a splendid structure two stories high and containing about eighty rooms, was completely destroyed by fire. The fire was discovered at 7 a. m. on the roof of the building. Efforts to stop the progress of the flames proved unavailing, and the entire building and contents were destroyed. The building was erected about two years ago by the Alabama Port Company and cost $10,000. It was at the time of its destruction under the management of J. P. McCann. The company carried only $5,000 insurance on the building and contents.

Steps were taken immediately by the Alabama Port Company to have a new building erected on the site of the old one. The new structure is to be built of concrete blocks.

Harris Announces.

Montgomery, Ala.—Maj. John G. Harris has formally announced his candidacy for one of the places as associate railroad commissioner. He comes before the people of the state thoroughly equipped for the office. He possesses all the elements and qualifications that go to make up a first-class officer. He is thoroughly acquainted with the needs and demands of the people and is in hearty sympathy with the reform movement that is going on against the railroad freight rates. He stands pat on that question. He states that his platform gives out no doubtful or uncertain sound. He is with the people in this fight.

Machinery for New Plant.

Anniston, Ala.—The machinery for the Lehman Manufacturing Company has been received. It will be installed at once at the company's plant, formerly the Anniston Furniture Factory, which will be in operation in the course of a few weeks. The plant manufactures blinds, window sash and various other wooden articles of similar description. It will employ a large force of workmen, and will be a valuable addition to the Model City's many prosperous industries.

Engineering Association's Convention.

Birmingham, Ala.—The annual convention of the Engineering Association of the South will be held in Birmingham Friday and Saturday, November 15 and 16. The business sessions of the convention will be held on the third floor of the city hall.

The convention will open Friday at noon, and it is expected that all the business will be finished at the night session. According to the present arrangements Saturday will be devoted to viewing the different points of interest in and around Birmingham, and Saturday night a banuet will be given at the Hotel Hillman.

Bonds for School.

Enterprise, Ala.—The city council has voted to call an election to issue $15,000 in bonds to be used in the erection of a school building. It will be completed in time for the next school year. In this action the council has the co-operation of the entire citizenship.

NEW OUTBREAK IN KIEFF

Slaughter in Odessa Goes on Day and Night Unceasingly.

FIFTEEN HUNDRED BUTCHERED

Dorpat in Flames—Peasants Are Marching and Pillaging — South Russian Merchants Sacrifice Their Property and Flee—Noble Women of St. Petersburg Are Mail Clerks.

St. Petersburg (via Eydtkunnen, Russia).—A massacre at Kieff is reported here, but without further details than that 1500 persons have been slain.

The situation there and elsewhere throughout South Russia is known to be extremely serious, but the Government is paralyzed by strikes of workingmen and mutinies among the troops.

New mutinies are constantly reported and lawlessness is increasing throughout the country.

Mutineers seized the arsenal at Ekaterinodar and secured 16,000 rifles, which have been distributed at Ekaterinodar and Novorossiysk.

A revolt is reported from Elizabethpol.

Insurgent troops are master of the situation at Novorossiysk.

At Kharkoff 5000 soldiers have agreed not to fire on the people.

At Rostoff-on-Don the Third Grenadier Artillery, 400 men, met and formulated demands.

Similar action has been taken, it is reported, by the military engineers at Odessa and by troops in several places in the Baltic provinces.

The troops at Lodz, Russian Poland, are holding meetings at the barracks every day and many cases of insubordination are reported.

Martial law has been declared in Livonia, chiefly because of the peasant riots. Large bands of peasants are marching and pillaging.

Yurief or Dorpat, a city of 50,000 people, 200 miles southwest of St. Petersburg, was reported to be in flames. It is one of the principal seats of learning in Russia, and has the chief school for the Protestant clergy in the Empire.

Although neither the Government nor the general public can get news by wire or even by mail, the strikers receive messages from the interior. Dispatches printed in the newspapers were said to have come to the Workingmen's Council.

The employes of the Kharkoff and Kursk, Kharkoff and Ekaterinoslav and Bielostok and Kieff Railroads struck to show sympathy with the post and telegraph strike.

The only break in the ranks of the telegraphers was reported from Karan, Middle Russia. Elsewhere all the Government's attempts to resume telegraphic communication have been unsuccessful.

In this city there has been a partial resumption of mail delivery by means of volunteers, but it requires two policemen or two soldiers to escort every carrier.

Princesses as Mail Clerks.

In the postoffice the officials who can be spared are working in other departments with volunteers, some of whom are of high rank. Princess Obolensky, Princess Kofhubey, Countess Morvinoff and Countess Ozeroff are sorting letters in the mailing room. Miss Sinowjeff, daughter of a former Minister of the Interior, carries letters.

At one mail station the strikers stole a march on the military. The guard of soldiers had gone to dinner, leaving their rifles stacked outside. The strikers raided the station and hammered off the breechlocks of the rifles before they were discovered.

At Moscow more than twenty carloads of letters lay undistributed.

It now appears that the comrades of Soffoloff, the railroad engineer of Samara, whose condemnation to death threatened the country with a general railroad strike, independently organised the strike on the Transcaspian line from Alexandrovsk to Tashkend. The Governor-General of Kurshka, who exercises plenary powers on the Afghan frontier without consulting with the St. Petersburg authorities, convened a court-martial and sentenced him to death.

SENATOR MITCHELL DEAD.

Hemorrhage Following Dentist's Work Kills Oregon Leader.

Portland, Ore.—United States Senator John H. Mitchell died at the Good Samaritan Hospital, in this city, at 11.40 o'clock in the forenoon. He was seventy years old. Death resulted from complications which followed the removal of four teeth at a dental office. A hemorrhage of unusual severity ensued, and, despite the application of the most powerful styptics known to dental science, could not be stayed. Physicians were summoned, but the combined scientific knowledge of the dentists and physicians was unavailing.

Train Jumps Tracks.

The Troy special on the New York Central Railroad was partially wrecked by two cars jumping a switch when nearing the Grand Central Station, in New York City.

Depew Resigns as Director.

United States Senator Chauncey M. Depew resigned as a director of the Equitable Life Assurance Society.

Twenty-two Mutineers Killed.

Twenty-two mutineers were killed and forty wounded in a battle with regular troops at Kieff, Russia.

WE OWN THE MOST GOLD

United States Now Greatest Money Power on Earth.

Comparison of the Currency Reports of the Principal Nations of the Globe.

Washington, D. C.—The United States now holds more gold money than any other nation on earth, according to the report of the Controller of the Currency Ridgely. Here are the figures:

Gold money in the world.	$5,987,100,000
Held by the United States	1,348,200,000
France	926,400,000
Germany	886,700,000
Russia	783,700,000
Great Britain	583,200,000

This country also stands at the head of the silver holding countries, as the following shows:

Silver money in the world.	$3,130,400,000
Held by the United States	685,100,000
India	603,800,000
France	411,100,000
China	350,000,000
Germany	210,200,000
Spain	173,700,000
Great Britain	113,400,000

The South American Republic of Colombia has more outstanding paper currency than any other nation—$741,000,000. The United States is next, with $559,900,000, and Brazil third, with $368,100,000.

France is still the richest country per capita, where the average is $37.13. The United States is second, with a per capita average of $31.41. Germany is third and Spain fourth.

The stock of money in this country is now $2,883,100,864, of which $2,031,290,042 is in coin.

All the money in the world amounts at present to twelve and a half billions of dollars, of which six billion is in gold and over three billion in silver. The amount of gold money has increased $359,000,000 in the year, but silver has decreased by $71,000,000 and paper currency by $91,000,000.

There are now 5757 National banks in the United States, an increase of 280 in the past year. They hold $551,300,000 in Government bonds. They have $800,000,000 capital. Their individual deposits now amount to $3,820,682,000, an increase of $112,000,000 in the year. They have declared avarage profits of more than nine per cent. There is one bank for every 4182 inhabitants.

One hundred and forty-four National banks failed and fifty-seven private banks went to the wall. Most of the failures were in the Middle Western States. There were no failures in New England.

In commenting on bank failures, Controller Ridgely renews his previous warning that they are due in almost every case to fraudulent or illegal acts by the officers, which no amount of examination by Government officials can prevent. The burden is on the directors, not on the examiners.

Cheyenne, Wyo.—Ten persons were killed in a wreck at Wilkins, near Green River, Wyo., on the Union Pacific, at 2.15 a. m., when train No. 2, the east-bound Overland Limited, crashed into a Pacific Coast fast freight head on.

The dead: Brink, engineer, Rawlins; James Busbee, first cook, Omaha; John Lawless, fourth cook, Omaha; Frank McKenna, electrician, Omaha; J. A. Newson, mail clerk, Cheyenne; Frank Peterson, mail clerk, Cheyenne; J. E. Phillipar, mail clerk, Cheyenne; Ed. Rosenbaum, second cook, Oakland, Cal.; —— Stigers, electrician, Ogden; —— Smith, brakeman, Rawlins.

Of the dead, Phillipar, Peterson, Stigers, McKenna and two corpses which were being taken east were incinerated.

The following passengers were injured: Miss Edna Mishak, San Francisco, internal injuries; Mrs. Maud Riley, San Francisco, slight injuries; Dennis F. McArthur, Oakland, New Zealand, dangerous; M. C. McCoy, Kansas City, Mo., slight injury; Mrs. Gertrude Cook, San Francisco, serious; F. M. Hulitt, San Francisco, slight.

The cause of the wreck was said to be carelessness in reading orders on the part of the conductor and engineer of the freight train, the latter of whom was killed. This train had orders to wait for Nos. 10, 6 and 2, the Overland Limited. No. 10 was run in two sections, and the freight crew, failing to note that their orders read for two sections of No. 10, waited until three trains had passed and then started on their run. The accident occurred at a sharp bend in the road around a hill, where an approaching train could be seen only a few hundred yards. No. 2 was running at full speed, endeavoring to make up time, as it was several hours late.

A train was quickly sent out from Green River and the dead taken to that point, while another train equipped with doctors and attendants, was started from Rock Springs and the injured were taken to the hospital at that point.

The first twelve laden cars of the freight train and the mail, baggage, composite and dining cars of the flyer were completely demolished and destroyed by fire. The postal clerks, dynamo-car electrician and his assistants were pinned down by the wreckage and burned to death, some of them in sight of the horrified passengers, who were powerless to render aid. The damage caused by the wreck is estimated at $130,000.

MARY ROGERS IS HANGED

Vermont Woman, Who Murdered Her Husband, Pays the Penalty.

GOV. BELL REFUSES REPRIEVE

Declares at the Last Moment That the Law Must Take Its Course — Mrs. Rogers Was Only Nineteen When She Committed the Crime—History of the Celebrated Case.

Windsor, Vt.—Mary Mabelle Rogers was hanged in the afternoon for the murder of her husband, Marcus Rogers, at Bennington on August 12, 1902.

Shortly before 1 o'clock Mrs. Durkee went to Mrs. Rogers' cell and dressed her for the execution. The woman wore the combination black dress of waist and skirt that was made last spring for the execution set for June.

As Mrs. Rogers left the guardroom to walk down a short flight of steps to the inclosed court she saw for the first time the instrument of her death. It is a walk of forty feet or more to the gallows steps. When the condemned woman reached the gallows floor a deputy tied her hands. The black sack and the cap were then drawn about her and all was ready.

A signal was given to a deputy below and the trap sprung.

The prison physician, Dr. Dean Richmond, stepped forward, examined the swaying body, and pronounced the woman dead. The witnesses, who had formed a semi-circle around the gallows, filed into the guardroom.

Later the body was cut down and turned over to an undertaker.

The final blow to Mrs. Rogers' hopes for life was given in the forenoon when, after a conference at his hotel in White River, Governor Bell refused a reprieve.

The condemned woman collapsed in her cell when told of the Governor's refusal.

Father Delaney came later and they prayed together for many minutes. Then he gave her the last rites of the church.

Mary Mabelle Rogers killed her husband, Marcus Rogers, in order to obtain $800 life insurance and marry another man. She never received the money and the day before her execution signed it over to her brother-in-law.

Mary Rogers was deeply loved by her husband. Tiring of her life with this quiet, unpretentious man, she left him. In her unfortunate life that followed in Bennington she met a youth, barely seventeen years old, by the name of Leon Perham, a half-breed Indian, who became enamored of her. Perham wanted to marry her.

Rogers was a powerful man, and his end had to be accomplished by cunning and deceit. She wrote that she was ready to come back; wanted to come back and would he forgive her.

According to Perham, Mary Rogers had written to her husband, asking him to meet her at 9.30 at night.

After the meeting and pretended reconciliation Leon led the way into Morgan's grove, and by a winding path to the river.

"May said she had a new trick with a rope.

"He laughed. May laughed too, and drew out a piece of clothesline. Then she said she'd bet she could tie me so that I couldn't get loose.

"'I'll bet you can't,' I said.

"She tied my hands loosely and I broke away. She tried it again, and I broke away again.

"'Try it on him,' I said.

"'I'll bet you can't tie me,' said Rogers.

"He was as strong as an ox. May tied him and tried to tie him tight, but he just gave a heave and broke away. She tried it a second time, and he broke loose without any trouble. She was getting worried. She tried it a third time, and when he broke loose again I saw that she couldn't tie him.

"'Let me do it,' I told her.

"I took the rope—a piece of clothesline. I said to Rogers:

"'Kneel down and put your hands behind you.'

"He thought it was fun and kneeled down. I tied his hands behind him and he struggled, but could not get loose. His back was toward May.

"I gave her a signal, and she drew the vial of chloroform and the handkerchief from her bosom. She poured a few drops on her handkerchief—not very much—and put her arms around his neck. Suddenly she drew his head in her lap. The move threw him on his hands, which were behind him, so he was doubly helpless. He sputtered. Suddenly she emptied the vial on the handkerchief, completely saturating it. He began to struggle.

"'May, what does this mean?' he asked, heaving his body. 'What does it mean!'

"'Jump on his legs,' she said.

"I jumped on his legs to hold him. May had gripped him around the neck and pressed the handkerchief against his nose. His struggles were terrible. He threw me off as if I had been a kitten. He got one hand free and used it to help himself.

"While he struggled, his breath was deeper. Suddenly he became more quiet, and in a moment he was limp. May clung to him, even after he was quiet, pressing the chloroform-soaked handkerchief down over his face. When all was over she got up."

The body was rolled into the river. A note was left, purporting to have been written by Rogers, that he had drowned himself.

Mary Rogers is twenty-two years old, and was little more than nineteen when she killed her husband.

MARION'S ARIA

BY ELIZABETH PRICE.

The decision will be announced this afternoon," said Marion, nervously twitching her thread. "I can hardly wait to hear it, yet I dread it, too. O mother, if it should be Marguerite Ollis instead of me I don't see how I could bear it! There, I've broken my needle!"

"Give me the glove, dear. I'll mend that rip. You are too excited to sew."

"I'm afraid I am, though I suppose I ought to be ashamed to confess it," and Marion laughed a little quivering laugh as she relinquished her task.

Anna looked up from her geography sympathetically. "It's no wonder I feel that way for you till I can hardly tell the Isthmus of Panama from the Gulf of Mexico."

"What's all the fuss about, anyway?" asked Alfred, coming back with an effort from the vortex of adventure into which the book he held had plunged him.

"We are to learn at this afternoon's aria in the "Inflammatus" from the "Stabat Mater," announced Marion, who was now strapping music into her roll.

"The Philharmonic Society is going to sing it at the grand concert, Alf," explained Anna. "They've engaged a solo singer from Boston, or somewhere, for all but this one piece, but they are going to choose somebody in the society to sing this aria. It's awfully high and hard, and it's a great honor to be asked, and Marion hopes she is going to be chosen.

"Oh, yes. Well, what is the aria or whatever you call it?"

"It's where one singer goes shrieking and warbling away up above everybody else, and the chorus sort of mumbles along underneath, soft and subdued."

Even Marion, in spite of her agitation, laughed at her sister's definition. "It's this way, Alf," she said. "I've been studying very hard. My teachers tell me I have done well but no one has yet given me a chance to demonstrate to the public what I amount to. This aria is hard, but I can do it. If I should be chosen to sing it, it would encourage me very much, and it would introduce me formally into the musical world, where there are to be had choir and concert engagements such as I need."

Alfred's face was full of interest. "What about this Ollis girl?" he asked.

"She is the one I fear most. She can't sing the high notes as well as I can, but she is so pretty and dresses so beautifully. But she doesn't expect to earn her living by her music—and to be chosen would mean nothing to her beyond the honor of the moment."

"Well, I am perfectly sure you'll get it," said Anna with much decision.

"Go in and win, Marion. You're all right," and Alfred subsided into his cushion.

"Three o'clock, daughter. Here's your mended glove. Be brave and cheerful to meet whatever comes."

"I'll try, mother. Thank you; you are such a comfort!" and the girl, pale with anxiety, kissed her mother tenderly and departed.

Half an hour later Conductor Morosini raised his baton for silence. Before him were ranged his orchestra behind them the chorus, row after row. In the front row of sopranos sat Marion Wood. Her hands held her music without a tremor, but her heart beat suffocatingly, and her breath came too fast for comfort. Next her sat Marguerite Ollis, her pink and white prettiness set off to the best advantage by her becoming costume. If she was nervous no one would have suspected it, as she smiled archly up into the conductor's face.

He glanced at her girlish beauty, the soft curves of her cheeks and the waves of her sunny hair; then at Marion, silent, intense, almost grim in her earnestness.

How could he know why one looked forbidding the other graciousness itself? He shrugged his shoulders.

"The music is not all, even here. Miss Ollis is a picture—the audience—they will be better pleased," he murmured to himself.

Then aloud, "Ladies and gentlemen, it is with pleasure I have to announce to you that the aria from the Inflammatus will be sung by Miss Marguerite Ollis. Arise, Miss Ollis. Ladies and gentlemen, behold the prima donna of the Philharmonic Society."

Of course she rose and bowed and smiled bewitchingly, and the chorus applauded vigorously, while Marion sat, wretched and heart-sick, yet calm, still holding her music in hands that did not tremble.

The professor, glancing in her direction with a little guilty feeling at his heart, reassured himself: "She does not care."

Then they sang, and Marguerite's voice came out clear and sweet on every difficult passage. Marion had never heard her do so well. The inspiration of the occasion lent her new strength, and the number closed amid a deafening round of applause from the chorus.

The rest of the rehearsal passed off uneventfully, and at the close Marion hurried away from the condolences and comments of her friends. Supper was waiting when she got home, but even her favorite cream puffs failed to comfort her.

"I hate Marguerite Ollis!" she sobbed, stormily. "She has everything without an effort, while I, who ask only for a chance to work my own way am denied that!"

"She's a stuck-up snip!" declared Anna, wiping her own eyes, while Alfred clenched his fists as if he longed to fight it out with somebody.

Marion's mother did not say anything at first, only stroked the brown head on her shoulder and kissed the hot hand that trembled in her grasp, while Mr. Wood said tenderly: "There dearie, there!" as if his eldest born were once more a wee toddler with a broken doll.

It was after the table had been cleared and they sat about the room with book or needlework that the mother gave her little talk. Marion had subsided into silence after her outbreak, and Mrs. Wood looked sympathetically at the flashing eyes and still quivering lips.

"Be fair, daughter," she said. "Don't do yourself the injustice of being unjust to Miss Ollis. She was honestly chosen and deserves no blame. We add to our own unhappiness when we try to satisfy our anger by finding fault with others as innocent as we are."

"But she doesn't need this chance, mother, and I do."

"True, dear, yet you couldn't expect her to refuse the invitation because of that, especially when she is ignorant of the fact. You will look at the matter differently after the keenness of your disappointment has worn off. I can trust you to be good, dear, and when you find the chance to do a little kindness for Miss Ollis, it will help you more than it will her."

"Kindness—never!" declared Marion, emphatically. But Mrs. Wood only smiled wisely and waited.

The evening of the concert arrived. Again the great stage was occupied by orchestra and singers. Evening dresses and fluttering ribbons transformed the platform into a rainbow of delicate lines, with a background of somber black where the gentlemen sat.

Between the conductor's rostrum and the auditorium was seated Madame Scarlati, the visiting solo'st, whose fame had attracted an unusually large audience.

In the front row of sopranos sat Marguerite, respendent in silk and pearls. Beside her sat Marion, without jewels or laces, yet looking very sweet in her simple gown of white, with her abundant brown hair arranged in a coronal and in its thick braids a single crimson rose.

The opening chorus was sung magnificently, and at last Madame Scarlati rose. High and clear, her voice soared away over the audience, sweet and soft it rippled back, to end in a burst of melody that carried hearts by storm. The listeners applauded with enthusiasm, and Marguerite spoke.

"I can never do it!" she said, tremulously.

"Do what?" aked Marion, withdrawing her fascinated gaze from the singer and turning it to the pale face at her side.

"That aria. Could I pipe up my weak little voice after hearing her?"

"I think you will be obliged to," replied Marion, coldly.

"Oh, I cannot. You do it for me, please. You sing it much better than I. You should have been chosen in the first place. Oh, do sing it! I've been getting worse and worse all the evening, until now I'm almost frightened to death. You must!"

"I will not," was the decided reply. "I shall not crowd myself into the program uninvited."

"Oh, I know I'm acting silly, but I never realized what it would be. Look at that dreadful sea of faces out there! And Madame Scarlati! And the Stabat Mater comes next! Oh, I can't, I can't. Won't you, Marion?"

"Most certainly not. You are most absurd."

The baton tapped the stand for attention. The chorus rose, the orchestra began. With a grim satisfaction Marion heard the shivering breaths beside her. Maguerite's pretty color had vanished and her big, frightened eyes looked out from a pale, drawn face.

At last the solo was reached. Weakly her voice chimed in—weakly and tremulously. Professor Morosini glowered darkly and nodded fiercely. Madame Scarlati put up her lorgnette and turned to view the singer. She nerved herself for the second phrase—she must do it!

But only a little way ahead loomed those intricate turns, and most awful of all, that high C. She could never do it, if they killed her for the failure.

In terror she stumbled while chorus and orchestra tried to make amends. The conductor's face was like a thunder-cloud, and a ripple of amusement passed over the audience. If Marion's ears there rang above everything else part of a sentence: "Do a little kindness."

How could she swallow her pride and sing unbidden the part that had been denied her?

"Do a little kindness," she heard again. A wave of pity for the poor young thing beside her surged up and washed the bitterness away. Suddenly under the weak, faltering solo there slipped a supporting voice, clear, smooth round.

The agony on the conductor's countenance gave way, and the chorus relaxed their tension and Madame Scarlati dropped her lorgnette and smiled. On through the difficult passages the velvet voice went, true, unerring, reaching its climax unfalteringly on the dreaded high C.

She had her reward. The storm of applause from the appreciative audience rivaled that which madame herself had won. And after the concert was over Professor Morosini thanked her with an earnestnes that left no doubt as to his sincerity and added:

"By the way, Miss Wood, to-morrow I have to meet a committee who desire a competent soprano for a choir position. I think you will suit them; and the salary is good. Two o'clock to-morrow—my studio."

Then Madame Scarlati came and took her hand, and said:

"It was beautifully done, my dear. Your position was most trying, but you met the difficulty graciously. I am glad to know you, and I shall expect to hear of you again."

At home, after the jubilee had somewhat subsided, and Anna and Alfred had stopped talking at once and continuously, Marion laid her head in her mother's lap, and said, humbly:

"I came very near giving up to my wickedness. But my mother's little sermon came to my mind and saved me. Sermons are always more effective you know, where the preacher exemplified his text."—Youth's Companion.

Gown a Newspaper Hit.

Superb paper gowns have been seen before, but some of the costumes at Tuxedo's paper ball last week showed what the folk of the smart set really can do in this line once they put their minds to it. The women were pictures in exquisite creations designed by Paris dressmakers while the men made a rather poor showing in comparison. Of course, things were easier for the women, for to make pretty gowns out of paper is not so very difficult. It was hard to believe in some cases that the robes were not of some other fabric, so graceful and dainty were they, with the latest touch of fashion about them. One very lovely one was of white crepe paper decorated with wreaths of tiny pink paper roses and leaves. It had a full skirt, just trailing a little, with a deep flounce, set on with a large cord piping just as silk and chiffon evening gowns are being trimmed. The pointed girdle was of green paper on a frame to hold it firm, and there were small puffed sleeves with decorations of little roses like those on the skirt. One woman departed from the crepe paper scheme and appeared in a most attractive dress of newspapers, gathered from all corners of the globe. The skirt was made on a foundation of crepe paper and had three flounces, all made of the titles of newspapers. The bodice was completed by the skillful arrangement of smaller headlines finished by a black paper girdle. This gown furnished the wearer with plenty of topics for conversation and also furnished up the wits of others. "That gown ought to make a hit in the papers," was the jealous comment of one particular observer who had been known to run after the society reporters with typewritten descriptions of her robes.—New York Press.

This was the state of affairs when Gerald Mann appeared on the scene and was attracted by the beauty and the personality of Miss Loveless.
When he went slap up against sexlessness, so to speak, he was dumbfounded, then interested. He was a thorough man of the world, widely perfectly passionless was incredible, preposterous. Hence he was stimulated to try his powers and in the

For the first time in his life Gerald

He struggled violently and ridiculed question about that.

Because

He wasn't handsome, lacked fame,
He bore no proud ancestral name;
Four figures, at the very most,
Could sum the wealth he had to boast.
To culture he made slight pretense,
His wit was rather forced and dense;
His chance for winning her seemed slim,
And yet—she fell in love with him!

By no means, now, was he a fool;
He had a courage calm and cool,
And perseverance of the kind
That shuts its eyes and goes it blind;
But, peace or strife, or sun, or snow,
Whate'er occurs, contrives to go!
Not traits that win a heart, you'll say,
And yet—she married him one day.

"He has his faults, as who has not?"
She said, when friends her reason sought
For wedding him. "He's plain, 'tis true.
I see all that as well as you!
For while on wedding him I'm bent,
My love's not blind to such extent
I cannot see his faults and flaws,
And yet, I love him—just because!"
And yet, I love him—just because!"

The WAYS of DIPLOMACY

BY GEORGE SHEDD

(Copyright 1905 by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

Marian Loveless was referred to among her acquaintances as the living statue, and with good reason. Beautiful, accomplished, with the figure of a Venus, of perfect health and strength, she had arrived well into the twenties without feeling a tremor of the heart. And it was not that admirers in plenty had not been made welcome the warmth in her gentle nature, for she had many lovers who had used all their art to inspire the divine passion in her heart.

"I must have been born deficient," she said frankly to one of these in pressing his suit. "For I certainly do not have any warmer feeling for you, or any other man than hearty friendship. I admire you, I respect you, I have not a criticism to make of you. But I have no such emotion as you express, nor such as my girl friends tell me of, and of which I read in books. I am lacking somehow. I am sorry both on your account and on my own. I can not conceive of such a thing as giving up my independence and individuality and merging my life into that of a man. I shall always respect and like you and will be a sister to you."

"Sister!" exclaimed the man, and went to the Klondike and never saw her again.

And that was the story she was compelled to tell her most ardent admirers.

"I like the men first rate," she said. She liked their robust way of looking at things and doing things is quite a relief at times from the petty little ways the women have, and they are very handy in dancing and rowing and driving and running automobiles, and that sort of thing, but to go away and live with and become a part of—I simply cannot understand it.

This was the state of affairs when Gerald Mann appeared on the scene and was attracted by the beauty and the personality of Miss Loveless. When he went slap up against sexlessness, so to speak, he was dumbfounded, then interested. He was a thorough man of the world, widely traveled and of much experience with women. That a woman in perfect health, with red lips and swelling curves and flashing eyes should be perfectly passionless was incredible, preposterous. Hence he was stimulated to try his powers and in the trying he lost his heart.

For the first time in his life Gerald Mann was in love. It was the real thing, too, and a hard attack of it. He struggled violently and ridiculed himself mercilessly over his pre-slumber cigar, but to no avail. He had had many affairs and indulged in some engagements, but this was different. This woman he must have to complete his life. There was no question about that.

In the meantime her adamant attitude was not even scratched. Mann talked interested her with his well-stored mind and his knowledge of men and places and things, but that was all. He never quickened her pulses—unless when he put an added dash of recklessness into the speed of his automobile.

Finally, after struggling in the meshes until he was sore and tired, he surrendered and poured out his declaration of love to the object of his desires.

"Oh, dear, how dreadful!" she said, calmly. "Just when things were running along so nicely, too, and we were having such jolly times. And now I must lose you."

"Never!" he exclaimed, passionately.

"Yes, I will," she replied in a discouraged tone of voice. "I don't know where you will go or what you will do, but you will go away from me. And you knew it all the time, too—you knew I had no capacity for love. Why did you do it?"

He breathed some fervent words about it being "written by fate," and ordained from the beginning of time, and that sort of thing, and finally received the inevitable promise of sisterhood.

But Mann was older and more experienced than the others had been and the attack having been deferred

She was all a-tremble.

so long may have been more severe. Any way, he refused to go away, or to accept her as a sister. He simply staid on and announced that he would wait for the arousing of her woman's nature which, he averred must come some day.

Things were not wholly comfortable or normal, however, and so far as Mann was concerned, certainly not joyous, when he met at his club one day an old friend, an Italian gentleman with whom he had become very well acquainted one summer when he was abroad. The Italian was a musician—a violinist of exceptional ability and high reputation. He had come to tour America with his wonderful violin. After greetings had been duly exchanged, the two sat down and had a long chat, renewing the old acquaintance most happily. Mann could not keep back the great change in his life and the disappointment with which he had met. Signor Valleti was all sympathy, but resolutely skeptical regarding the lady's incapacity to experience the gentle joys of love.

"Et eez eempossible," he said. "Et eez reedeeculous. All ladeez have ze divine passion. Et eez a part of zeir divine nature."

"Well, I'd like to find the way to arouse it," growled Mann moodily.

"Have you tried ee zeemagination?" asked Valleti. "Zat is zee key to unlock ze most guarded heart."

"I've tried everything," replied Mann. "I've bombarded her with the most potent love stories, I've read her the most passionate poems, have taken her to see the strongest plays, plioted her through the art galleries where hang the most stirring pictures—but to no avail."

"But zee music—zee vera language of lof—have you tried zat?" asked the Italian.

"Oh, yes, after a fashion," replied Mann, "but the girl is absolutely devoid of musical qualities. She does not sing a note, and does not even thump on the piano. She is utterly indifferent to music."

"No, no, signor," exclaimed the Italian. "Zat is eempossible. No woman ees indifferent to music."

There was a long pause during which Signor Valleti smoked fiercely. Then he said:,

"My friend I—I vill arouse zee woman nature in zee lady."

He went on to outline his plan and the hopeles lover grasped it as a drowning man at a straw.

So it happened that Miss Marian was invited by Mr. Mann to hear "a violinist—said to be a remarkable player." A manager friend of Mann's had asked him to hear this violinist, it was explained, and give his opinion before a contract was signed. Mann implored Miss Loveless to go with him and aid him with her counsel. Protesting her inefficiency, she yielded to his pleading. It was explained that the new violinist had met with an accident which had temporarily disfigured him and he declined to play before any one unless guarded by a screen. So it had been arranged to hear him in the conservatory of the manager's home, where the player could remain out of sight.

The conservatory was most artfully arranged. The lights were soft and low and the rays of the moon shining through the glass transformed the place into a veritable garden.

They seated themselves on a rustic seat surrounded by flowers and plants, the air sweet with the scent of roses. Presently out of the very stillness and so softly as to be almost a part of it, came the subdued strains of music. They were sweet and restful and seductive. Gradually the music rose in volume and power and took a lighter vein. It spoke of green meadows and sparkling water and leafy shade. Then with a sudden change it leaped into the realm of passion and told the whole story of love. The unseen artist filled the air with love, longing, despair, pleading, delirious joy. Then with a flash the strains turned to a wooing song irresistably ardent, tender and compelling.

Mann arousing himself from the trance the music had thrown him in, glanced at Marian. Her eyes were downcast, tears were on her flushed cheeks, she was all a-tremble. He slipped his arm about her. She did not resist.

"Marian, sweetheart," he whispered.

"Yes, Gerald—dear," she replied, letting her head sink on his shoulder.

Gerald afterward told her that the unseen artist had secured the engagement.

Which was true.

HIGH LEVELS REACHED BY MAN.

Heights That Necessitate Artificial Inhalation of Oxygen.

The highest point at which mountain climbers have stayed for any length of time is 20,992 feet on the Himalayas, where an exploring party painfully stayed for six weeks in 1902. Higher still at 21,910 feet is the extreme point of Mrs. Bullock Workman's ascents, the greatest height reached by a woman. Mr. Bullock Workman kept on to a point 23,393 feet high, which is the greatest height reached by any mountain climber.

The altitudes reached by Mr. and Mrs. Bullock Workman were above those at which M. Berson, the aeronaut, began his artificial inhalation of oxygen. At 26,240 feet the aeronauts in general begin the continued inspiration of oxygen, and neglect of this precaution was responsible for the death of Croce, Spinelli, and Sirel at 28,208 feet, their companion, Tissandier, just escaping by a miracle.

Mount Everest, the highest point of the globe, is only some 700 feet higher, 28,995 feet, and 3,000 feet above that begin the cirrus clouds that are composed of spicules of ice. At 35,424 feet is the highest point ever reached by man. This is the height attained by M. Beron in his balloon on July 31, 1901.

Would Find Him Again.

"Pardon me, madam," says the attendant in the depot, "you seem to be in distress."

The woman addressed turns her melancholy eyes upon the attendant, and replies:

"I am."

"Is there any way in which I might be of assistance?"

"I don't know. I've lost my husband, and——"

"Permit me to offer my condolences. Into each life some sorrow——"

"Save your condolence for him when I get hold of him. We were sitting here waiting for the train to go home, and a comic opera troupe went through the station and one of them was a big, fat blonde, and my husband got up and said he was going to get a drink of water, and that was an hour and a half ago, and—— Save your sympathy, young man, save it for Jabez Smith of Mooresville, Pennsylvania, who will be in sore need of comforting words within ten minutes after he begins to make excuses to me."

Frost Makes Fat Turkeys.

"Cold weather makes fat turkeys," said the poulterer, "because in a warm fall the ground keeps soft, the vegetation lingers on and the fields are full of worms and bugs. What's the result? The turkeys from sunrise till dark tramp the tempting fields on long forages, eating the worms and bugs, which thin them, and walking all their soft and fine flesh into tough, stringy muscle.

"A cold fall, with early frosts and snows, freezes the ground and kills the bugs. Then the turkeys are not tempted to wander. They loaf in the farm yard, gorge an abundance of grain and put on flesh like a middle-aged woman at a seashore hotel. But in a warm fall, hunting the irresistible bug, the turkeys do their fifteen or twenty miles regularly every day and become athletes. For athletic turkeys there is no public demand."

The Deserter.

He had not changed. This season, as of yore, it was the same. Between each act, with some glib lie upon his tongue, he slipped out blandly, to return odorous of cloves. She drew closer to him.

"George," she breathed passionately, "promise me one thing."

"What is it?" the man asked.

"Promise—oh, promise me—to stop drinking for my sake."

His response rang out clear and true.

"I will," he said. "Hereafter, when I drink it will be for my own sake solely."

And, as the curtain fell, he scrambled adroitly over seventeen pairs of legs and disappeared again

CROWD SCHEMES OF ANIMALS.

Devices Which Show They Come Pretty Close to Thinking.

They were talking about instinct in animals. "I saw an exhibition of greediness and cunning by a horse," said one of them. "There were two old dirt wagon horses that had stopped for the noon meal. The driver had emptied a portion of oats into a wheelbarrow set at the head of the two horses, who still remained in the traces. The horses were to eat out of the common mess.

"Old Mr. Bay Horse, who evidently was a veteran in the dirt wagon line and possessor of a good appetite, would grab a mouthful of oats and splutter them out on the ground on his side of the wheelbarrow. After he had collected quite a pile on the ground he commenced on the common stock, and when he and his companion had cleaned out the wheelbarrow old Mr. Bay Horse turned to his private store on the ground, while his companion, from the other side of the wagon pole, looked hungrily on, but could do nothing.

"I was traveling in the mosquito country last month," said the other, "and the mosquitos were terrible. They attacked cattle and live stock and would drive them frantic. At one place a farmer was burning brush in the field, and I noticed a dozen cows and horses clustered in the lee of the smoke made by the burning brush. They would move around as the wind shifted, always keeping in the smoke drift, where, of course, no mosquito could live. And the animals stood with closed eyes, too."

To Help Women from Cars.

As the girl alighted from the trolley car she turned to her escort approvingly. "Do you know you are a man in a thousand?" she said.

"I'm delighted to hear it," he answered radiantly.

"I mean about helping a girl off a car," she said hastily. "You are the first man, but one, who has helped me off the car properly for a year. Men generally grab a woman by the elbow and hoist her shoulder high in the air. That makes her look awkward and feel cross. Or else they take hold of her arm with such a grip that it hurts, rumples her sleeve and pushes it up from her wrist. Sometimes they grab her hand, and she has urgent need of both hands to hold on to her skirt and to the side of the car. Now, all she desires is that they gently but firmly slip one hand under her arm simply to steady her, help her to keep her balance, and that's all. And that's what you did."

"Well, who's the other man?" inquired her escort.

"Oh, that's Jack," she replied, blushingly. "We're engaged."

Advance.

"In the old days," observes the man with the dyed whiskers, "the physicians believed that blood letting was a sovereign remedy for whatever ailed a patient. They would bleed him for gunshot wounds or anything else."

"So I have read," comments the man with the hay fever.

"But, of course, as human knowledge broadened, the medical profession came to the knowledge that——"

"That if a man needed to be bled they didn't have to stick a scalpel into his arm," finished the man who had gone to fifteen specialists to be cured of rheumatism.

Had to Wake Up to Find Out.

The following is told of an elderly gentleman, known as Uncle Zeke, on the West Side:

While stopping at a certain hotel in the northern part of the state he called at the office one morning, and the following conversation took place:

"Landlord, the durn cats in this house made so much noise last night that I couldn't sleep a minute."

The landlord laughingly replied: "Why didn't you get up and put them out, Zeke?"

"Well," said Uncle Zeke, "I didn't know they was there till morning."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Teetotaler.

A woman who not long ago was introduced to the venerable Susan B. Anthony, asked Miss Anthony if she was not a believer in total abstinence.

"Well," said Miss Anthony, with a pleasant smile, "I am a worker for the cause of temperance; but I am no bigot. Your question reminds me of a story that I once heard about Robert Bonner the publisher.

"It appears that when some one asked him if he was a teetotaler, he replied: 'I should not call myself one. I had a glass of sherry when I came to New York in 1844.'"—The Sunday Magazine.

Who Can Answer?

Why does the dog turn round and round
Before his sleeping posture's found?
Why are the young colt's legs so long?
How does the cricket pipe his song?
Viewing the springtime cherry tree,
Blossoms or leaves do first we see?
From which side does one milk a cow?
Why do the sun-dogs storm avow?
Why does the rabbit, in a chase,
Prefer uphill to lead the race?
What are the cat-tribe's whiskers for?
Why does the rat have tail galore?
When cows and horses rise, my dears,
Which is the end that first upreares?
Why does the whale proceed to spout?
How do the lobster's eyes "stick out"?
On which side of the tree-trunk grows
The moss—and why, do you suppose?
Why is the ocean salt, and why
Does it not o'erflow nor yet run dry?
Its volume changes not at all!
But wax the rivers great or small.

WHERE FRANK LENZ DIED

There is rather a startling reminiscence of the old days of the bicycle craze in a paragraph written recently by Col. P. H. H. Massy in the Geographical Journal. Col. Massy has done a great deal of exploring in Asiatic Turkey and in one of the fastnesses of that country he came across a memento of the late Frank Lenz, the American bicyclist who was wheeling around the world when he was murdered in this little-known section of the world. Col. Massy says: "It was now October. A blinding snow with bitter wind served as a reminder of the altitude and advancing season. From the lake a route was followed to Toprak Kale (Alashgird). Along here fairly easy tracks cross into Transcaucasia. It was here that an official asked my opinion of a nice American-made revolver. There was an inscription on it which showed that it had been presented to Frank Lenz by some American bicycle club. I returned it with the remark that it was a good revolver which might hang him. At my unexpected reply the official's companions looked at him curiously while he appeared visibly agitated. Frank Lenz had been murdered near here a couple of years before while on a bicycle tour round the world and I knew the story. Up to now this individual was under the impression that the inscription was either the maker's name or an ornament."

Interesting light is thrown on the origin of horseshoes in another portion of the same account: "Some of those ancient roads suggest at once the thought of how horses' hoofs were treated in those days for passage over such great blocks of smooth stone. It would appear that they were not shod. In endeavoring to solve the question as to when horseshoes were first used I made inquiries at the Quirinal museum in Rome last autumn and found that this was apparently in Marcus Aurelius' reign (161 A. D.) And the proof lies in his own equestrian statue in that museum, where his horse's uplifted foot shows the shoe with six nails, whereas previous sculpture only gives the uncovered hoof."

It is little the Turk knows of germs. Col. Massy writes again: "On all the roads followed abundance of water is as a rule available. It is one of the delights of the wild life associated with travel in most parts of Turkey in Asia that inviting streams and springs follow or cross one's path incessantly; indeed, water absorbs the place in conversation in that country which health does in this. The Turk is quite a judge of water as far as 'lightness' and 'heaviness' are concerned—that is, digestibility or otherwise—although he cares but little what microbes or fever germs it may contain. As a rule, the water is pure and excellent almost everywhere."

REFUTE DR. OSLER'S THEORY

The proposed walk of four and a quarter miles was caught up by other cheerful and aged ones, until eleven starters had volunteered, says September Outing Magazine. It is to be said of them that Dr. Osler's heedless remark about chloroform had something to do with the fire of enthusiasm which swept these pedestrians into their project.

The ladies had a cup of tea by way of preliminary ceremony, and were then persuaded to stand in column to be photographed. The man with the camera was a lad of 78 years, fitly chosen for the task. Jeremiah Merritt Greene, who has been making pictures in the Middle West for fifty years.

Then the signal was given for the start and the eleven entries tripped away at a lively gait. Many of those who followed them gave it up and went home after a few blocks because their legs ached. Early in the pilgrimage several of the venerable walkers had to be held in check. It was hoped that all of them would finish, and, therefore, the amazing energy of the leaders threatened to tire out the others. Two miles were covered as cheerfully as if this were a picnic party, and there were no laggards.

A few blocks from the goal, Mrs. Maria Mueller, aged 80, who was one of the impetuous ones that had to be held back in the earlier stretches, began to do a skipping step along the pavement, as if she were coming "down the middle" in an old-fashioned Virginia reel.

She had an able partner in Mrs. Susan Deckhart, also carrying the burden of 80 years, and between these two the ardor of competition flamed so high that they started off together on a lively little trot for the finish. It was a "dead heat" between the pair, and first honors were thus divided. The others trailed in after them in the best of spirits, all vowing that they were by no means exhausted.

The actual walking time for the party averaged one hour and forty-five minutes for four and a quarter miles.

Every one of these old ladies is the mother of a large and sturdy family. Their consensus of opinion concerning their vigor in old age was that they had worked hard in their homes all their lives, had never "bothered their heads about dieting," and early in life had adopted the rule of "early to bed and early to rise." The average age of these eleven matriarchs is 78 years.

THE BIRTHPLACE OF TENNYSON

Sowersby estate, with the rectory where Tennyson was born, is in the market, and its sale will be an event to lovers of the poet.

The room in which the poet first saw the light overlooks the lawn, and the church, perhaps the God's house of "The Two Voices," where his father officiated, stands on a low hill opposite the house. The garden is full of associations of "In Memoriam," but it should be remembered that the trees are not as they were in Tennyson's time—"the towering sycamores" and "the poplars four" have gone, and the whole place is a wilderness. A "gray old grange," the reputed residence of "The Northern Farmer," stands close to the rectory, so close indeed, that young Alfred Tennyson, by reaching out of one of the rectory windows, could steal the apple tarts from the pantry of Barber, the tenant.

A little way from Sowersby is "the brook that swerves to left and right thro' meadowy curves," passing in its course three mills, one of which may have suggested certain points in the landscape of "The Miller's Daughter." It is also the subject of the poem known as "The Brook." On the same estate there is a wooded dell, deep, wild and shady, which is called "Holywell Glen. Here Tennyson wrote "Byron Is Dead." It is, not improbably, the "dreadful hollow" which grinds and clangs its leafless ribs and iron horns, and should appeal to readers of "Maud." Not far away is Mablethorpe, perhaps "the lovers' bay" mentioned in "The Golden Supper," and the seaside resort where Tennyson for the first time saw "the hollow ocean ridges roaring into cataracts." Spilsby, where Sir John Franklin was born, is within easy walking distance.

FLAWS IN MEDICAL EDUCATION

Dr. Franklin says if he were asked in what respect the medical education of forty years ago was most deficient he would name three particulars: (1) Preliminary examinations; (2) obstetrics; (3) administration of anaesthetics. And he would give precisely the same answer if asked this question regarding the status of the recent graduate to-day. He at once dismisses the idea of implied lack of progress by stating that progress has been made, but further advances are eminently desirable. With the first of these points we believe no one will disagree; possibly some, at least in this country, would not assign the other to such great importance, though the lack of knowledge regarding anaesthetics is shamefully apparent. Dr. Franklin considers a requirement of twenty obstetric cases as only "trifling with the subject." What would he say regarding institutions which require only two? The trend toward the production of specialists is listed as one of the most startling facts of the day in connection with medical education. The development of specialism is explained in two ways: (1) The severe competition in practice which the young graduate must meet; (2) the demand of the public for specialists. The people should be educated in this regard. Specialism, even as now practiced, is considered on the whole as yielding good practical results; the public could from it receive more good if they knew what to seek and what to avoid in its practice. One element, the advertising fraudulent specialist, should be eliminated; this practice, rampant though it is in England, is believed there to be less general than in America.—American Medicine.

TWO HORSE-TRADING STORIES

Every one who ever lived on the banks of the Kennebec river has heard of "Jim" Keagan, a shrewd Irishman, who thirty years ago was making lots of money buying Prince Edward Island horses and bringing them to Maine, where he always found a good market. He was a great friend and admirer of James G. Blaine, who took pleasure in riding with him behind a good pair of roadsters.

On one occasion "Jim" had out a horse for the inspection of a possible purchaser. As usual, he had a good story to tell. Finally the visitor asked Mr. Keagan his price.

"Five hundred dollars," was his prompt reply.

"I will give you a hundred and a quarter," was the response.

"Jim" looked him over for just a moment, and, seeing that he was all done, cocked his hat in a manner peculiar to himself and replied, in his characteristic manner: "My friend, that is a h—l of a drop, but he is your horse."

On another occasion "Jim" bought a fine horse from one of the nearby towns and agreed to give $300 for him. The horse was brought to the stable yard, and "Jim" counted out $300 in bills to the seller, and, taking the halter, asked if that was all right. The seller demurred that there should be 50 cents more for the halter.

"You ask 50 cents for that halter?" asked "Jim."

"Yes," came the reply.

"Well, let's see how much you get," and, taking the bills back as if to recount them, he passed the man 50 cents for the halter, which he slipped from the head of the fiery horse, and remarked that he guessed he would only take the halter and did not care for the horse.

CIRCUIT COURT.

Court adjourned Friday, the week's work being notable for the verdicts in two cases, viz: W. J. A. Mejton, found guilty of "murder in the second degree" and sentenced to twenty-five years, and James Norman, found guilty of "assault to ravish," given fifteen year. We hear that the Norman case will be appealed. The juries in both these cases are to be congratulated on doing their duty like men who have the best interests of their county at heart. Claude L. Branch's case, indicted for an attempt to murder R. Calloway, of Maplesville, was continued by defendant. The cases of Tom Jones, Joel Fulmer, Thos. M. Barnett, Less Cox, Elbert Mims and John Vinson, continued to next term. Jem Harrison, Joe Walker and Cleveland Davis, each charged with "grand larceny," were given two, tree and four years respectively. Leander McCants, "concealed weapons," $50 fine. Oot Headley, "disturbing religious worship," mistrial. Ab Penton's sentence of six months at hard labor for the county was reduced by the pleading of his friends to three months' imprisonment in the county jail; Penton made an exceptionally good bond for his fine, having on it such names at F. A. Gulledge, H. B. Oliver and J. H. Gulledge. Dock Parrish's term of thirty days in the county jail was cut down to ten days. Attorney W. M. Adams (who was honored by Solicitor Bowling with the appointment to act in his place the first week while he was sick) did very good work with the grand jury in finding indictments, as about all of the new cases passed on by him that came to trial this term resulted in convictions. Mr. Adams is to be congratulated on his record.

THE CLANTON DISTRICT SUNDAY SCHOOL CONVENTION.

The very cold weather, while preventing the attendance of many from a distance, did not chill the cordial interest of the citizens of Clanton, and a large congregation was present at the district Sunday school convention held at the Baptist church Sunday, December 3. The devotional service was led by Rev. A. C. Swindall, who also made a very hearty little speech of welcome to the vistors, giving further evidence of his genuine sympathy for Sunday school work, which makes his co-operation so valuable to those interested in the county association. Judge Denson, president of District No. 4, presided over the convention, and his tactful ability to say the right thing at the right time makes him a most efficient chairman. Judge Joseph Carthel, the State secretary, made a forceful and convincing talk on the inter-denominational Sunday school organization, which means help for every school within reach of its good work. Mr. T. U. Crumpton, the county president, and Mr. W. S. Holloway, of Montgomery, where present and added to the interest and pleasure of the meeting by words of help and encouragement. Mr. W. J. Mullins, in his ingenious defense of Beats 4 and 11 being the last to fall into organized line and his humorous insistence of "just give us a chance—a chance is all we want," brought down the house and won for himself the honor of being elected president of the district. As Professor Sessions said in his graceful speech of nomination, "Since Judge Reynolds so ably and warmly seconded all Mr. Mullins said," he was elected secretary and treasurer, but pleading stress of other duties, he appointed Mr. Giles to serve in his place. Mr. W. P. Lowery, of the Mt. Pleasant school, was elected vice-president. Surely with these capable officers and with such men to help as Judge Deason, Professor Sessions, Mr. Tipton Mullins and Judge Reynolds, District No. 4 has all the "chance" she needs. The next district meeting will be held at the Clanton Methodist church, the date to be decided later. The visitors on this occasion were entertained most hospitably and remember with pleasure the kindness shown them. This meeting was the last mile stone on the road which led Chilton county to the "Banner" rank in the State association. It has taken eighteen months to effect the thorough orangization which brings us to this standard. At the county convention in July at Maplesville five of the six districts were reported organized, but several had failed to hold conventions during the year. In September and October four of the required meetings were held—Maplesville, Beats 7 and 8, at Stanton; Beat 9, at Thorsby; Verbena, Beats 5 and 10, at Salem, and Jemison, Beats 1 and 2, at Oak Grove. The Isabella district, Beats 3 and 6, held a meeting at Mulberry in July. So this convention in the Clanton district was the last link in the chain, and at last Chilton is a banner county. This success, however, will mean no cessation of effort, for only faithfulness and earnest work will keep the reward we have won. The responsibility will rest largely with the district officers, for one delinquent district will drag the whole county to the level of its failure. We have strong men at the head of the districts, and we are confident of their ability to help Chilton county to do even greater and better things in the year that is coming. The county association has been invited to hold the annual convention in Clanton next summer, and thus we are assured already a successful meeting.

The above is from the pen of Miss Mary Carr Gibson, of Verbena, who, in our opinion, has been the chief worker in the county association. To her untiring zeal and faithful Christian work can be laid the redemption of Chilton County Sunday School Association from the slough it had gotten into.—Editor Union.

S. C. A.

The Chilton county branch of the S. C. A. met in the court house at Clanton Saturday. Officers elected for next year were: F. A. Gulledge, president; N. J. Calloway, vice-president; J. N. Dennis, secretary; A. G. Dake, treasurer; Executive Committee, L. H. Reynolds, Tipton Mullins and J. W. Sorrell; delegates to State convention, W. Y. Nix, L. H. Reynolds, R. J. Williams, J. W. Sorrell and F. A. Gulledge. A resolution of thanks to President W. H. Conway and the other county officers of the past year for their good service was unanimously carried. A resolution "not to increase the cotton acreage of 1906 over that of 1905" was carried. The next county meeting will be held on the first Saturday in January (6th). The State meeting will open at Montgomery on Wednesday, January 3, 1906. Prof. Hare, of Auburn (in place of Col. Thornton, who was unable to be present), gave an interesting talk on good roads in the afternoon.

Chilton county stands at the head of the counties in this State in the association, and it is beyond dispute that the labor and time spent by W. H. Conway as president and J. N. Dennis as secretary were prime factors in that success. Others have done well, but these two did better.

S. C. A.

District No. 51 was called to order by Past President W. H. Conway. The following business was transacted: First, election of officers for 1906: President, J. W. Sorrell; secretary, C. C. Conway; county delegates, T. J. Dorming, J. N. Glass, W. A. Barnett. Then followed discussion about the holding of cotton for 15 cents, and forty-seven bales were pledged to hold for that price. We urge that every farmer hold for ninety days or 15 cents. Respectfully submitted.

C. C. CONWAY, Secretary.

CALERA.

Editor Union:

A merry Christmas and a happy New Year to you and your correspondents. The Ferrell Printing Company, our great job printing establishment, has put on another journeyman and a "cub." This concern is doing a great deal of commercial printing for localities many miles from Calera, in Mississippi, Georgia and Alabama. Work on the new Union depot is being pushed. Postmaster J. W. Pilgreen is putting an iron roof on his residence. The lower story of the Wade block is completed, and in a few days will be occupied by our postoffice, drug store and a barber shop. The upper story when completed will be rented as professional offices. The Presbyterian church is getting a new roof. The Calera circuit of the M. E. Church, South, has a new pastor, Rev. Cary, who preached his first sermon here sunday to an attentive audience.

VETERAN.

Clanton, Dec. 11, 1905.

Editor Union:

A few words to the Republicans of dear old Chilton. Gentlemen, I reckon we will have a committee meeting in the near future; I have written Hon. W. R. Jackson, our chairman, to make the call, and if the call is made I hope every Republican in the county will feel interested enough to attend the meeting, as there is business of importance that should be attended to at once. Respectfully,

MOSES A. KILLGORE.

THORSBY LETTER.

The Misses Simpson have gone to Birmingham, where they shall spend the Christmas holidays with relatives and friends. Mr. Johnson arrived with several excursionists from Michigan on last Wednesday. Mr. T. T. Thorson brought a land seeker on the same excursion. Mr. Magnuson went to Chicago on Saturday morning. Messrs. E. Hanson and C. Howard have purchased the carnation farm from Mr. Magnuson. They are busy setting out new slips and in removing their plants to a more favorable site near town. Everybody enjoyed the fine sermons delivered by Rev. Bates, of Birmingham, last week. We hope that at some future date we shall be able to listen to him again. Mr. G. W. Phalin spent Sunday in Thorsby. The concert given by the Socialist Club on Saturday night was well attended. The program seemed to be enjoyed by all present. Messrs. Middleton and Robinson, of Clanton, were visitors in town on the 9th. Miss Della Wambem returned to St. Ausgor, Iowa, after a two weeks' visit in Thorsby. One of the saddest, most terrible accidents that ever occurred here happened at J. F. Peterson's cannery on Tuesday afternoon, when Abel Peterson fell into a vat of boiling water. Fully three-fourths of the body was burned and scalded. He lived through the night, but though everything possible was done for him death claimed him at 7 a. m. Wednesday. The stricken parents have the heartfelt sympathy of the entire community.

NEMO.

MOUNT PLEASANT.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space in your valuable paper to air my knowing faculties a bit. Our school is progressing smoothly under the management of Prof. James A. Thomas. The Sunday school at this place is doing a grand work; attendance fairly good. The local lodge of the F. E. & C. U. of A. is doing a thriving business at this place. We had a called" meeting at the residence of J. Wiley Foshee on the night of December 7 and initiated four ladies, one of whom was Mrs. Julissa Foshee, aged 72 years, mother of Bro. J. Wiley Foshee. She is our oldest member so far. Boys, when you get to work just right, those good old sisters can't wait for regular meetings but beg for an extra meeting, so they can take the "solemn obligations." The sound of the "hammer and the saw" permeates this whole section, except, of course, the news of our county union and the doings of the "powers that be" in court at Clanton. G. F. Harris has been sick with slow fever for six weeks, but "ye scribe" hopes he will soon recover under the care of kind friends and the skillful aid of Dr. N. S. Johnson. Mrs. J. J. Culp is about recovered from a tedious case of fever. Excepting the above, the health of this community is fairly good. Wishing a "Merry Christmas" and "Happy New Year" to The Union and its many readers, more anon.

UNION IKE.

RANDOLPH.

Clear, bracing weather. People all busy. Prosperity on every side. Ira Ward is building a new store on the lot once occupied by Latham Brothers, near the postoffice. Mrs. John Weeks went to Ashby Sunday. The school here is progressing nicely. Boge Rasberry, an old-time Chiltonian, raised in Beat 3, but who for some years has resided in Bibb, came to town last week en route to his new home near Mobile, where he will reside in future. John E. Ware, from the Duff farm, near Centreville, was in town last week. Miss Fannie Cobb, of Pleasant Grove, was in town Monday. Let all the young readers of The Union instead of studying trifling things, devote their time to character building. Let them note the difference in character and reputation. Character is what we are. Reputation is what people think we are. So in the great beyond character is what will be considered, while reputation will be nothing. Oh, how we look with pity on the poor, weak, cringing slave to reputation, afraid to defend the truths on any question, for fear some one will think unfavorably of them. Such people leave character out of the question, and such people will never prove a benefactor to humanity. Why, just consider the great Wesley. He labored for character and let reputation go, and today his name is honored throughout the world, while those who opposed him are unknown. Look at the brave Tom Watson, a man of conviction. He did not consider reputation, and now he is honored even by his enmies. Then, young people, seek to build a character that is good, regardless of reputation. We look with admiration on men in our own midst who have not regarded reputation in their efforts for the good of the people. We allude to L. B. Pounds, J. A. Logan, R. M. Honeycutt, L. H. Reynolds and others. So we conclude and wait for the arrival of the welcome Union.

"ONE OF THE BOYS."

LOCAL AND PERSONAL.

Attorney A. C. Smith and wife have a "new boy" at their residence. "He" arrived about a half hour after "low twelve" Saturday night, and weighs 12 1-4 pounds. Bro. Smith is a good republican, and like President Roosevelt, he don't believe in "race suicide," this making six children in his family, 4 girls and 2 boys. The two youngest are boys, and it does look as if Col. Smith is doing his best to recruit the republican ranks of the future. Dr. J. P. Hayes is the physician in attendance, and he reports "mother and child doing well."

W. R. Bean was a pleasant visitor Friday.

W. G. Thacker was in Clanton Friday. He lost his horse Thursday. It died from enlargement of the heart.

W. C. Dyer, a prominent merchant of Stanton, was in Clanton last week.

Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Jones were in town Friday.

W. P. Smitherman was in Clanton Friday.

C. D. Hagans was a pleasant visitor Friday.

O. H. Sundell was a welcome caller Friday.

G. A. Keen and J. A. Poole, of Pletcher, were pleasant visitors Saturday.

W. C. Scarborough was a welcome caller Saturday.

J. A. Logan was a pleasant visitor Saturday.

W. L. Popwell, of Kincheon, was a pleasant visitor Monday.

T. D. Whitworth was in Clanton Monday.

P. M. Jones, of Burwell, was a welcome caller Monday.

The three Dorminy brothers—T. J., J. E. and W. G. J.—were pleasant visitors Tuesday. They are worthy children of that fine old couple, Mr. and Mrs. James Dorminy, of Union.

John Linsey and son, James, were in Clanton Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. N. Dennis and Mrs. Dennis' sister, Miss Bettie Welch, of Autauga county, were in Clanton Tuesday.

John Mims No. 1 and James A. Mims were in town Tuesday.

W. G. Culver was a pleasant visitor Saturday.

Dr. William F. Price and one of his students, Mr. H. Seacrist, both of Indiana, were in Clanton Friday and Saturday. Dr. Price is a veterinary surgeon of high repute in northern Indiana, being a graduate of two colleges teaching that specialty; but his own health is poor, and he intends settling in Chilton county. Any one having animals with any ailment will do well to consult Dr. Price.

Rev. Turnipseed is the new pastor at the Methodist church in Clanton.

Judge Reynolds went out to Frank Marcus' home on Sunday afternoon and married Mr. W. F. Teel and Miss Carrie I. Marcus. Congratulations from THE UNION.

THE WEEK IN COTTON.

Gilbert & Clay's Weekly Market Letter.

Opinion has been moulded and important historical facts in the cotton trade have been recorded by the events of the past week. It has been shown, for instance, that southern people are better qualified to pass upon all the conditions that enter into the raising and marketing of a cotton crop than are the speculators of New York and foreign countries. Even the agricultural department, loath as it is to set forth facts that will serve to advance and enrich southern interests, has had to confess the shortness of the crop, even while doing its best by changing the method of figuring to make it appear large.

The correctness and honesty of the methods employed by the census bureau to collect statistics as to ginning are not questioned, and the census report of yesterday, while disappointing some whose views were probably registered too low, at the same time reflected very closely the actual condition of statistics submitted to that department. The main thing is to know what percentage of the crop is represented by the ginning to December 1, and best information and opinion point to 88 to 90 per cent. Forecast also indicates that the next ginners' report, to be issued on the 20th inst., will show now over 9,100,000 bales.

When all has been said on this question, however, there yet remains the stubborn fact that, no matter what pressure may be brought to bear upon the market by speculators and those financially interested to depress it, the holders of spots is the deciding factor, and absolutely no weakness appears to date in that department.

So long as spots remain firm and difficult to buy, except at premiums, and in the absence of any unfavorable features pointing to a lessening of consumption, we can see very little risk in buying cotton in the anticipation of much higher prices later in the season.

Interior and port receipts continue to show a decline as compared with last year. The dry good markets continue firm. The farmer and merchant are in excellent financial condition, and cotton will bring cash any day.

Lawson-Barron Troubles.

Boston, Mass.—The Suffolk county grand jury failed to return an indictment against Thomas W. Lawson, who had been held for that body by the municipal court on the charge of criminal libel. The charges were preferred by Clarence W. Barron, the proprietor of the Boston News Bureau. A "no" bill was reported by the jurors.

The grand jury returned no indictment against Mr. Barron, against whom it was understood Mr. Lawson had offered evidence before the grand jury in connection with a criminal libel complaint.

The action of the jury puts an end to the controversy between Messrs. Lawson and Barron so far as the criminal courts are concerned. Mr. Barron's charges were based upon an article referring to him published in a magazine and alleged to have been written by Mr. Lawson. Mr. Lawson's complaint was founded upon statement in Mr. Barron's newspaper.

Running Street Fight.

New York.—In a running street battle of two mounted policemen and one patrolman against a highway robber in Brooklyn two of the officers were shot. The robber, James Murphy, was caught in the act of holding up a 17-year-old boy, and ran down Carlton avenue, dodging behind trees to shoot at his pursuers. The police fired only one shot, fearing to hit pedestrians. Murphy first brought down Patrolman Edward Quinn with a bullet inthe hip, and then Mounted Policeman Edward J. O'Connor, who was also hit in the hip. He tried to shoot the horse of the remaining mounted officer, but the revolver failed to fire, and the officer captured and arrested him. The wounded policemen will recover.

Father Gapon Is Up to Death.

St. Petersburg, via Eydtkuhenen.—Father Gapon, who was leader of the workingmen at the inception of the labor troubles nearly a year ago, which led up to the present revolutionary movement, was Thursday condemned to death by a tribunal named by the central revolutionary committee. Two emissaries of the committee were named to carry out the sentence. Treachery to the cause of the people is the charge made against Father Gapon. On his return recently to Russia Father Gapon argued strongly against the continuance of the strikes. Immediately it was declared by the revolutionists that he had been bought by the government.

SCIENCE AND MECHANICS

One of the principal agricultural industries of the Philippines, which is expected to be greatly promoted by the introduction of American methods and energy, is based upon a plant not of native but of American origin—tobacco.

The growing of grapes in graperies furnishes quite a source of revenue in some countries, notably Belgium and the Channel Islands, where large quantities are annually grown and exported, the United States being a good customer for them.

Locomotives built in Germany, but modeled on the American "Atlantic" type, have recently been put into service on the fast express line between Berlin, Cologne and Aix la Chapelle. They are more powerful and swifter than the ordinary German locomotives.

A boiler furnace, as is known, works best when as little heat as possible escapes through the chimney. To some extent, says Technische Berichte, this escape is unavoidable, for if all the heat were utilized, the chimney would not draw, since it is the heat in the chimney which first produces the draft in the furnace necessary for burning the fuel. Nevertheless, too much heat escapes by the chimney in most cases. A patent recently granted professes to rectify this defect by bringing the flue containing the products of combustion to the place where the steam is applied before it passes into the chimney.

In the construction of the Amabele-Butterworth Railway, in Cape Colony, unusual difficulties had to be surmounted, according to the Pall Mall Gazette, and the result is, from an engineering point of view, one of the most remarkable railways in existence. After passing through the Kei Hills the line winds around another hill, and then, at a lower level, goes under its own track. This portion of the railway is known as the "spiral." At another point the line travels along the bank of the Mangulu River for two miles, and then doubles back for a mile and a half, so that, after covering three and a half miles, the train is really only half a mile to the good. This section is called the "zigzag," and, with the spiral, is unique in South Africa.

Smoking Cars in England.

Accommodation for smokers in railway trains, which is now being discussed, dates back only to 1868, and on October 1 it will be thirty-seven years since travelers were first entitled to smoke by rail. The question was raised as an amendment to a board of trade bill regulating the railway system, and providing, among other things, for means of communication between the passengers and the guard, and also imposing a penalty of £500 on any spectators to a prize fight. A clause enjoining smoking carriages was proposed by Mr. Sheridan, M. P. for Dudley, and carried by a majority of sixteen, after a debate in which John Stuart Mill made his last speech in the House, earnestly supporting the reform, and recommending with remorseless logic that the last carriage in the train should be reserved for smokers.—London Chronicle.

Some Disraeli Epigrams.

The following are some of the little known epigrams of Lord Beaconsfield recently collected by an admirer of Disraeli:

"Be frank and explicit. That is the right line to take when you wish to conceal your own mind and to confuse that of others.

"What we call the heart is a nervous sensation, like shyness, which gradually disappears in society.

"Nobody should look anxious except those who have no anxiety.

"Women are the only people that get on. A man works all his life, and thinks he has done a wonderful thing if, with one leg in the grave and no hair on his head, he manages to get a coronet; and a woman dances at a ball with some young fellow or other and pretends she thinks him charming, and he makes her a peeress on the spot."—Harper's Weekly.

A prominent woman suffragist, who would stop all subscriptions to the magazine which published Grover Cleveland's articles and refused to publish the replies, reveals what she might do with suffrage if she had it. She would probably start a revolution if beaten at the polls, suggests the Elmira Gazette.

DESERT EXPLORERS' PERILS

FATE OF A PARTY THAT UNDERTOOK TO SURVEY SEISTAN.

A Hazardous Enterprise in a Remote, Inhospitable and Unfrequented Part of India—Conspicuous Instance of Bravery in a Native Surveyor.

The Seistan boundary commission, which has now returned to India, was one of those hazardous enterprises that the survey officers of the Government of India are every now and then called upon to undertake in remote, unfrequented and inhospitable regions, to penetrate into which, even with such supplies and escort as are feasible, is practically to carry one's life in one's hand.

For many months the heat in Seistan is overpowering, while a wind known as the "120 days wind" blows from the northwest with the force of a hurricane, its pace varying up to seventy miles an hour. In the winter there are violent snowstorms and blizzards, while the thermometer falls almost to zero. In a great blizzard which raged for five days in March, 1903, during the progress of the mission, the wind actually rose to 120 miles an hour.

One conspicuous piece of devotion on the part of a native surveyor named Mohi-ud-din deserves mention. He was a man of some distinction who had won the title of Khan Bahadur by previous notable surveys on the frontier. While in Seistan he was particularly desirous of exploring the Dasht-i-Margu, a very forbidding desert between the Helmund and Kash rivers, and in June, 1903, in spite of the extreme heat, he struck out from a point west of Rudbar in the Helmund, on a course nearly due north, his party consisting of four survey assistants, four Afghan guides and two camel men.

They marched all night, called a halt in the early morning and continued the march during the day. At nightfall the water carried by the camel had given out, and the guides urged that either the return journey should be begun at once or a route taken due west, so as to strike the northern bend of the Helmund. Mohi-ud-din, however, was determined to push on and a guide was sent off on a camel to find water. He returned with a leather skin full, but it was so brackish that those who drank it fell ill and could not eat their food. The party had then to march on, and they were fortunate enough to reach another well where a small supply of drinking water was obtained.

At midnight on the 14th day they started again, still steering northward, and at daybreak they halted on a high desert plain. There was no sign of water, and the position being critical, Mohi-ud-din reluctantly recognized the futility of further exploration. He agreed to return, but by night, after great sufferings from thirst, two of the guides became insensible. A third guide, Sultan Mahomed, tied each of them upon a riding camel and himself on a third camel. The animals were then linked together and left to go whither their instinct would lead them. Sultan Mahomed fell unconscious during the night and remembered nothing till he came to through water being poured down his throat. He and his friends had been rescued by a hunter who had wandered into the desert in quest of wild asses. The party were within an ace of death, but were taken to Chakansur, an Afghan village on the Kash River, and under careful treatment recovered.

The rest of the party under Mohi-ud-din met with a melancholy fate. They were too weak to march, and the first to die was a camel man, who wandered into the desert and never returned. The others remained all night with Mohi-ud-din, and in the early morning, seeing he was nearly dying, they crawled to a ravine close by and dug for water. No spring was found and their only relief was to throw the damp earth over their bodies. In the evening some of these men succeeded in struggling back to camp where they found Mohi-ud-din dead alongside of his horse.

His faithful attendant, strong in his sense of duty, cut the map off the surveyor's plane table and wrapped it round his body in his waistband. He afterwards explained that he was afraid to carry it in his hand, for fear he might become insensible and lose it. They then wandered from the camp and, finally, all but Saidu lay down in the shade of a high mound to die. Saidu struggled on the whole day, but must have become delirious, for he remembered nothing till he regained consciousness for a time by stumbling into a pool of water. On coming to again he found himself being carried on a man's back to Chakansur. He had been discovered by some villagers, and, as in the case of the three guides, his life was saved with difficulty.

The Afghan authorities sent out search parties with water, and eventually recovered the bodies of Mohi-ud-din, and the three sub-surveyors, together with the camp kit. The bodies were reverently interred by the Afghans at the shrine of Amiran, a place of peculiar sanctity, as Amiran is said to have been a first cousin of the Prophet. Mohi-ud-din's death, although brought on perhaps by too venturesome a disregard of danger, was a conspicuous instance of the devotion met with in the native ranks of the Indian Survey Department, and it is gratifying to learn that a fitting reward has been accorded to the faithful Saidu.—London Times.

STANLEY'S TRIP EASY NOW.

German Goes in Seventeen Days What Explorer Did in Nine Months.

Count von Gotzen, the Governor of German East Africa, has made a journey to Victoria Nyanza and around the great lake, which in distance covered and the circumnavigation of the lake much resembles Stanley's journey in 1875. But the two journeys are in other respects wonderfully different.

It took Stanley nine months and six days from the time he left the Indian Ocean to reach the lake circumnavigate it, and to reach the lake, cumnavigate it and attain the chief town of the King of Uganda, on the north shore. The time required by Count von Gotzen, however, to reach the lake, entirely circumnavigate it and arrive in Uganda within a few miles of the point where Stanley entered it, was seventeen days, six of which were spent at three German stations on the shores. He was back in Mombass on the Indian Ocean, just three weeks after he had left Zanzibar for his inland journey.

Stanley made the journey through the jungles, scores of porters carrying his baggage on their heads, and 6 or 7 miles a day was good work. Sometimes he was delayed for weeks while parleying with chiefs for permission to cross their territory. Von Gotzen on the contrary, made his comfortable journey in a well appointed train and was only two days in reaching the lake. The actual time of travel, in fact, was only twenty-four hours, for trains on the Uganda railroad do not yet travel in the night time.

Stanley made his way around the shores of the lake in small boats rowed by his black men. Several times the lives of the whole party were imperilled by storms that came near swamping the boats. But the German Governor stepped from the train at Port Florence to the deck of a fine and swift little steamer that carried him clear around the lake. He describes the steam voyage as one of his pleasantest experiences in Africa.

Now and then Stanley was attacked by islanders in the lake who had never heard of white men before and were bent on the destruction of the explorer's party. Many persons still remember the hue and cry that was raised in England when the news came of Stanley's fight with the natives of one of the islands. The fact is, not a man of his party would have escaped if he had not used his guns.

The German Governor, the other hand, was received at the three German stations which he visited and at the capital of British Uganda with cannon salutes, speeches, banquets and fireworks. Those were festival day at Schiraft, Muansa, Bukola and Entebbe, for it was the first time that a Governor of Germaan East Africa had visited the 700 miles of German coast line around the southern half of the lake.

Thirty years have wrought this wonderful transformation and it is only forty-five years since Speke, the discoverer of Victoria's Nyanza, groping his way through unknown countries and unfriendly tribes, was one year and four and a half months in reaching the lake from the lea.

Golf Cure For Hay Fever.

"I believe golf will cure any case of hay fever in the country," asserted George E. Colby. "I suffered from the worst kind of hay fever for twenty-two years, and I cured myself by playing golf. The new organization founded for the purpose of fighting the disease may be interested in knowing just how I did it. Well, I didn't know I was accomplishing a cure until it was all over.

"Two years ago, after suffering every year from the middle of August to the time of the first frosts because of hay fever, I took up golf playing because all the other Irving Park people were doing the same thing. Previous to that time I had gone to Colorado or northern Michigan every summer to get away from hay fever. This time, however, as the season progresseed, I was surprised to find that the malady was disappearing, and I didn't have to go away. I thought the change strange, for I had tried every possible remedy before that time without effect.

Last year I played golf with increased pleasure. Four times a week I went to the Irving links and got into the game for all it was worth. I perspired and breathed in the fresh air with a vim that couldn't help make me feel better. For over an hour each time I drove and putted ball's enthusiastically. I had no hay fever during the whole summer. I played the game again this year and have suffered not the slightest touch of the malady. I wondered what made the change and decided it was the golf.

"My advice to hay fever victims is: Play golf with enthusiasm, perspire freely and rid yourself of the disease. Breathe the fresh air of the links. Take the exercise with the right spirit four times a week and you never will be troubled with the fever again."—Chicago Tribune.

Ascertaining the Limit.

"Do you think your son will be a business man?"

"Yes," answered the proud father, "he shows indications of great caution and foresight. On Hallowe'en he asked the policeman to tell him how far he could go without being arrested. I think he will probably make a life insurance director."—Washington Star.

THE PULPIT.

A BRILLIANT SUNDAY SERMON BY REV. DR. T. CALVIN McCLELLAND.

Subject: Jesus' Idea of God.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—In the Memorial Presbyterian Church, Sunday morning, the pastor, the Rev. Dr. T. Calvin McClelland, preached the fourth sermon in the series on "Jesus' Idea." The special subject was: "Seriousness of Believing in Jesus' Idea of God." The text was Matthew v:44 and 45. Dr. McClelland said:

There is no Christian doctrine for which you could get so many men to vote as the Fatherhood of God. Nothing can exhaust the name "Father." It is the gladdest, but the greatest, the dearest, but the deepest, the sweetest, but the solemnest, name men can frame to fit God. We cannot put too much into the word, but we can put too little into it. It is the risk of that—of putting too little into the name "Father"—which gives us our theme. The theme is: "The Seriousness of Believing in the Fatherhood of God."

There are two kinds of men who put too little into the idea of God's Fatherhood. The first man is he who prefers to think of God as judge. To call God a Father, he thinks, is to enthrone indulgence. He views the doctrine with suspicion lest it rob God of authority, extract the fear of sin, and relieve the restraint of conscience. This man deplores the universal note in the preaching of Jesus' idea of God. If he preached it he would make it an esoteric doctrine to be mentioned only to those who had been initiated by conversion into the secrets of grace.

The second man who puts too little into the name "Father" is he who sees nothing in Fatherhood but sentiment. He thinks of God as too soft-hearted to rule, a doting grandfather too weak to punish. This man has the idea that love is too tender to blame a man for edging off when goodness hurts, costs or is unprofitable. For this second man the thought of God as a Father makes life a game, the world a playground and the infinite pity ground for infinite excuse.

To these two I bring this message of the seriousness of saying, "I believe in God the Father Almighty." The article of the creed is the most precious and the most perilous for us to repeat, and for these reasons.

First, one who claims God as Father must be ready to answer the question, What kind of a son are you? Fatherhood is something that we never think of when we talk about animals. The parent of a boy we call a father. The parent of a foal we call a sire. Here is a difference. The idea "father" suggests care, affection and forethought. The idea "sire" conveys only the thought of procreation. We do not expect the colt's sire to care for him, exhibit affection or take thought for his future. But if a man treated his son as a horse treats his young we would say of that man, he has never been a father to the boy. He had done all that the animal did for his offspring, but he had left undone those things which make fatherhood. And those things involve character, they imply faith, hope and love, they are not physical, but spiritual, activities.

By the same sign you never call a young horse a "son;" he is a "foal." The idea "son" suggests gratitude, loyalty and obedience. The idea of "foal" conveys only the thought of animal descent. We do not expect the colt to exhibit gratitude to his sire, to abide in the same stable or to evidence obedience to him. But if a youth treated his father as a young horse treats his parent we would say of that youth, he is inhuman. He might do all that the animal did for his progenitor, but he would have left undone those things which make human sonship. And those things involve character, they imply trust, affection and filial submission, and these things are not physical but spiritual activities.

So then, fatherhood involves a relationship and that relationship involves something owed on both sides. It assumes likeness in ideas, tastes and disposition; it claims reciprocity in character. Can the relationship with God expect less? You see the idea of fatherhood is like the rule about the square of the hypotheneuse of a right-angled triangle. Whether it be a right-angled triangle drawn on a child's blackboard or a right-angled triangle formed by three stars in the Milky Way, the rule works—the square on the hypotheneuse of a right-angled triangle is equal to the sum of the squares on the other two sides. This father and son relationship, like mathematics, works everywhere, on the earth, in the heavens.

I cannot say "Father" until I have begun to answer His call "son;" His Fatherhood does not exist for me until I have made my sonship exist for Him, until I have shared in His character. He is spirit and I must be spirit, too; something more than a body to be warmed, clothed and fed; something more than an animal to fight like a dog, root like a pig, sing like a bird or hive like a bee. I must be the child of the Eternal Spirit, the son of Infinite Faith, Infinite Hope, Infinite Love.

A Father's rights are unquestioned, absolute, ungiven. He has the right to expect everything to be reciprocated that He has given to us. The old fundamental need of personal struggle, personal consecration, personal holiness is doubled. Life is more critical than ever. I have no loophole to crawl out of; the lines are tightly drawn, I must be in my word what He is in His universe. From Sinai, it is said, the smoke ascended as from a furnace, and the mountain quakes greatly when out of a thick cloud with thunderings and lightnings the King gave His command to Israel. On a hillside sweet with the peaceful odors of plowed field, quiet save for the pipings of the birds, under a blue Syrian sky which mirrored its fair sun in Galilee's lake, the Father spoke through His great Son His will for the family. Yet I think Sinai's "thou shalt not kill" were easier to listen to than Jesus' "blessed are the merciful." The King's words, "thou shalt not commit adultery," less than the Father's "the pure in heart shall see God." The Sovereign's words, "thou shalt have no other gods before Me," as an ant-hill to the snow-capped Alpine summit, "Ye shall be perfect as your Heavenly Father is perfect."

Second—It is a serious thing to believe in the Fatherhood of God because it commits a man to living his life in absolute unselfishness. Given a father, and what follows? What an alchemist is a new-born babe. The touch of those tiny fingers transmutes the base metal of thought of self into the pure gold of thought of the unself. From the moment when his first babe's first cry summons the instinct of fatherhood in a man's bosom the man must deny himself, he must henceforth lose himself in another. Love once a mere passion of possession is re-born a passion for self-sacrifice. This father has a family, and it is the family, the home, the health of the whole which become his chiefest concern.

Given a son, and what follows? What must be the true son's concern? Surely it is the same as the father's. The father no more than the son, the son no less than the father, exists for that home. It is this mutual instinct of being supported and supporting which makes us sing, "There is no place like home?"

So here, again, the axiom of the earthly relationship we call home is true for the celestial relationship we call religion. This is the extension of the old Fifth Commandment in religion—"Love your enemies and pray for them that persecute you; that ye may be sons of your Father who is in heaven; for He maketh His sun to rise on the evil and the good, and sendeth rain on the just and the unjust."

Like God the Father, the Son must have a love that is boundless, ungrudging and gratuitous. The family, not one favorite here and another there, but all the members must receive without bias, be blessed without prejudice, be cared for without favoritism. The son must live so that no man can be poorer, no woman sadder, no child more wretched for aught he has done or left undone. He must live so that through his words and deeds men may see truth, reverence, purity, and possess the means of happiness, and he must so live not for profit, prudence or popularity; he must so live, though it means a curse, a crown of thorns and a cross.

And if we seek to know what that means, what sonship involves, we go to Him who taught us to say "Our Father." His life is just spent in going about doing good; He does so much for the imperfect, the defective, the degenerate, that He gets the nickname of "friend of publicans and sinners." He never bears a grudge, He never remembers an insult, He never seems to see anything in the men about Him but their need of the good things He has to give away. And He gives, gives until when He comes to die He has nothing worth gambling for but His cloak—the one that was pure white, woven without seam. That day, the day He died, the men He had lived for led Him away like a lamb to the slaughter. And while they were making the wounds for Him to hang by He prayed, "Father, forgive them, they know not what they do."

In the last place, it is a serious thing to believe in the Fatherhood of God, because it means that God's perfectness consists in His impartial love, and love is the most awful thing in the world. It has been said, "Be afraid of the love that loves you; it is either your heaven or your hell. The lives of men are never the same after they have let themselves be loved; if they are not better they are worse. For this is the mystery of love, its paradox—while it is the greatest thing in the world it is the most helpless." For the love of her child, without thought of the cost, a mother would give her own life in exchange; and yet she must stand at its death bed with helpless hands when the heart spring unwinds and the little life runs down. A father would give his fortune, his blood to keep his son's heart clean and white, but all his paternal passion cannot check that son's mad pace, if the boy's lust take the bit between his teeth and drag him along the edge of the moral precipice. A son may leave home; a despot might compel his subject to come back, a father can only wait, and watch and keep open the door.

We shrink to apply all we know of the weakness of human love to the divine. Yet it was through a man the Father made His love plain to us. He came, the Christ, to His own and they received Him not. He loved His own, loved them to the end, and yet at the end they deserted Him, betrayed Him, hung Him on a cross.

You remember the Tuesday before the Friday when they nailed Him between two thieves. He was standing in the temple at Jerusalem. Did He love that fair, rebellious city? You may never know how great was that love. Could He save that imperilled city? Jerusalem had bound love's hands with indifference so that He could not reach out to rescue her; she had tethered His feet with hate so that He could only stand still and watch her sinking into the gulf that Titus was to dig. Stand close to the Christ as He speaks—you see He is draining love—bitterest cup; He is realizing love's helplessness, "it is the wail of a heart wounded because its love has been despised" and it cannot avert the doom which impends over those it loves. "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem! how often would I have gathered thy children as a hen gathered her chickens, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate."

To sum up, it is a serious thing to believe in the Fatherhood of God, because this belief involves sonship, and sonship involves brotherhood, and brotherhood involves living for the spirit behind things, for the higher life, the eternal kind, on which death lays no hand, on which the grave has no claim.

For this higher life, in the Father's name I claim you. You have a perfect pattern of it in Jesus; you have a perfect helper in God's Spirit, which is yours for the asking. You begin to live the life by doing something for the man next you just because God is his Father and yours.

Peace of the Heart.

If quiet and peace could only be had by withdrawing from the duties and occupations of active life, then quiet and peace for most of us could never be. It is not in our power to fly to some far and still retreat, in whose quiet we may escape the evils and troubles here. And the corner will never be found in this world where care and evil shall be unknown by human beings. But the peace which the Savior gives His own is peace of heart and mind amid daily duties. It is that "central peace," which may subsist at the heart of endless agitation.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR DECEMBER 17.

Subject: Preparation For the Messiah, Mal. iii., 1-12—Golden Text, Mal. iii., 1—Memory Verses, 8-10—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. The coming of the Messiah (v. 1). 1. "I." That is, God. "My messenger." The New Testament clearly shows that the messenger referred to here was John the Baptist. Our Lord bore witness to John (Luke 7:27). See also Matt. 11:10; Mark 1:2, 3; Luke 1: 76. "Prepare the way before Me." That is, before the Messiah. Messengers sent before the Eastern kings prepared the way for the chariots and armies of their monarchs. A "king's highway" had to be carried through the open land of the wilderness, valleys filled up and hills leveled, winding by-paths straightened, for the march of the great army. Interpreted in its spiritual application, the wilderness was the world lying in evil. John prepared the way for Christ in a moral wilderness by preaching repentance and showing the need of a Saviour. "The Lord, whom ye seek." The Messiah whom you are expecting. "To His temple." Shall soon be presented before the Lord in this temple. He shall cleanse it from its defilement and fill it with His glory. "Messenger of the covenant." He that comes to fulfill the great design in reference to the covenant made with Abraham, that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed. Christ was the "mediator of the new covenant" (Heb. 9:15) — the "better covenant," established upon "better promises" (Heb. 8:6-13; 10:16). "Ye delight in." They looked forward to His coming with pleasure.

II. The mission and work of the Messiah (vs. 2-6). 2. "Who may abide." Who will be able to endure the testing of character His coming will produce? They did not understand the meaning of what they desired; just as many desire and hope for heaven without realizing what they must do to gain heaven. "Like a refiner's fire." John the Baptist said, "His fan is in His hand;" "He shall baptize you with fire." In the refiner's fire is placed the ore, a mixture of good metal with rock and other materials, and the fire (1) separates the metal from the dross, and (2) thus purifies the metal, but does not destroy it; but (3) it consumes the dross, or so separates it that it is cast one side as refuse. "Like fuller's soap" (R. V.) Soap such as we have was not known to the Hebrews till long after Jeremiah's time, but they used ash lye.

3. "Shall sit," etc. There is an allusion here to the refiner sitting before his fire with his eye on the metal. He kept it in the furnace until he knew the dross to be completely removed by seeing his own image reflected (Rom. 8:29). "Sons of Levi." The priests—God's ministers. "Purge." Cleanse, purify. "May offer," etc. A sinner cannot give acceptable service to God. The Lord loves righteousness; He accepts only a holy heart and life (Rom. 12:1). 4. "Be pleasant." The spirit of praise, obedience and helpfulness are like sweet incense before the Lord (Heb. 13:15, 16). 5. "To judgment." To decide on your case and condemn you if guilty. "Swift witness." Coming suddenly and unexpectedly. "The sorcerers." Users of witchcraft, all in alliance with spirits of evil; the users of amulets, charms, etc., which are really substitutes for religion. "Against those that oppress." The gospel is always in favor of the poor and against oppression. "And fear not Me." This was the foundation of all their wickedness. 6. "I change not." God keeps His covenants with His people.

III. Admonitions and promised blessings (vs. 7-12). 7. "From the days," etc. All through their history they had been given to backsliding. "Return unto Me." There was still a chance to repent. "Wherein." They did not know how far from God they were. 8. "Will a man rob God?" Sacrilege is the highest of crimes. And the most guilty are those claiming to be God's people. "Ye have." This evil is not only the guilt of priests, but of the whole nation. "Tithes." See Deut. 18:4. "Offerings." The first fruits—not less than one-sixtieth part of the corn, wine and oil.

9. "Ye are cursed." With famine and scarcity. God had thus punished them for neglecting to build the temple (Hag. 1:10, 11); now, for not maintaining the temple service. 10. "Bring —tithes." Make good your solemn engagement with Nehemiah (Neh. 10:29). "Into the storehouse." The chambers which surrounded the temple on three sides. "May be meat." That there may be provision for the daily sacrifices, and for the maintenance of the priests and Levites. "Prove Me." Take God at His word. "Windows of heaven." A poetical, proverbial expression, signifying a great downpouring (Gen. 7:11; 2 Kings 7:2). "Pour you out." "Empty out," as if God meant that He would empty forth His vast reservoir of blessings.

11. "Will rebuke." Prevent from coming. "The devourer." The locusts, the canker-worms, the caterpillars and all other destructive insects. "For your sakes." Because of My love for you, and for the sake of your prosperity. The devourer had been sent because of their sins, but should be stayed as a reward for their return to duty. 12. "All nations," etc. So great will be your prosperity and happiness that the fame thereof will extend to all nations, as in Solomon's time. God's people do in truth live in a delightsome land, a land of green pastures and still waters, of dear companionships and delightful skies. Blessed are that people who render lovingly to God the things that are His own. "Delightsome land." Your country will again be known as the pleasant land, as it was formerly called.

Eight months old and an acrobat, unable to walk or talk, yet possessing such startling muscular development of the arms and shoulders that he can balance himself on his hands and with heels in the air proceed across the room—these are a few of the remarkable physical characteristics of the infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Schnars, of Denver. Baby Schnars is no bigger in the aggregate than most other infants of 8 months of age, but the ligaments and muscles of his chest, arms and shoulders are mostly cords of steel. He can swing from a cane held in the hands of his sire with the ease and grace of a trained trapeze performer. And when this strong-arm baby takes notice of something on the table particularly attractive or desirable to his baby eyes he does not cry for it, but creeps to the table and raises himself by climbing the leg, hand over hand. Both Mr. and Mrs. Schnars are absolute believers in the efficiency of physical culture for the building-up and proper development of the human body and their theory is that the earlier these exercises are undertaken the better for the development of the individual such exercises are intended to benefit. With an eye single to the purpose of rearing a perfectly developed child the father and mother began a gentle but systematic and persistent training of the infant a few weeks after his birth. Neither of the parents are remarkable for any extraordinary physical development or accomplishment. They are of German descent and show the sturdy general characteristics of that race, but nothing more. But their baby boy is a wonder in muscular development about the trunk of his body and in this respect he is probably the strongest baby in the world. Otherwise he is like all healthy, normal children of 8 months of age.

Sound judgment is responsible for a lot of silence.

A BRAIN WORKER

Must Have the Kind of Food That Nourishes Brain.

"I am a literary man whose nervous energy is a great part of my stock in trade, and ordinarily I have little patience with breakfast foods and the extravagant claims made of them. But I cannot withhold my acknowledgment of the debt that I owe to Grape-Nuts food.

"I discovered long ago that the very bulkiness of the ordinary diet was not calculated to give one a clear head, the power of sustained, accurate thinking. I always felt heavy and sluggish in mind as well as body after eating the ordinary meal, which diverted the blood from the brain to the digestive apparatus.

"I tried foods easy of digestion, but found them usually deficient in nutriment. I experimented with many breakfast foods and they, too, proved unsatisfactory, till I reached Grape-Nuts. And then the problem was solved.

"Grape-Nuts agreed with me perfectly from the beginning, satisfying my hunger and supplying the nutriment that so many other prepared foods lack.

"I had not been using it very long before I found that I was turning out an unusual quantity and quality of work. Continued use has demonstrated to my entire satisfaction that Grape-Nuts food contains all the elements needed by the brain and nervous system of the hard working public writer." PAINFUL PE

Suggestions How to Find Re Suffering.

While no woman is entirely free from periodical suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. Menstruation is a severe strain on a woman's vitality. If it is painful or irregular something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to a serious derangement of the whole female organism.

More than fifty thousand women have testified in grateful letters to Mrs. Pinkham that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound overcomes painful and irregular menstruation.

It provides a safe and sure way of escape from distressing and dangerous weaknesses and diseases.

The two following letters tell so convincingly what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will do for women, they cannot fail to bring hope to thousands of sufferers.

Miss Nellie Holmes of 540 N. Davidson Street, Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Your medicine is indeed an ideal medicine for women. I suffered misery for years with painful periods, backaches, and bearing-down pains. I consulted two different physicians but failed to get any relief. A friend from the East advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, and no longer suffer as I did before. My periods are natural; every ache and pain is gone, and my general health is much improved. I advise all women who suffer to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. Tillie Hart, of Larimore, N. D., writes:

PAINFUL PERIODS

Suggestions How to Find Relief from Such Suffering.

While no woman is entirely free from periodical suffering, it does not seem to be the plan of nature that women should suffer so severely. Menstruation is a severe strain on a woman's vitality. If it is painful or irregular something is wrong which should be set right or it will lead to a serious derangement of the whole female organism.

More than fifty thousand women have testified in grateful letters to Mrs. Pinkham that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound overcomes painful and irregular menstruation.

It provides a safe and sure way of escape from distressing and dangerous weaknesses and diseases.

The two following letters tell so convincingly what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will do for women, they cannot fail to bring hope to thousands of sufferers.

Miss Nellie Holmes of 540 N. Davision Street, Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"Your medicine is indeed an ideal medicine for women. I suffered misery for years with painful periods, headaches, and bearing-down pains. I consulted two different physicians but failed to get any relief. A friend from the East advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so, and no longer suffer as I did before. My periods are natural; every ache and pain is gone, and my general health is much improved. I advise all women who suffer to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound."

Mrs. Tillie Hart, of Larimore, N. D., writes:

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I might have been spared many months of suffering and pain had I only known of the efficacy of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound sooner; for I have tried so many remedies without help.

"I dreaded the approach of my menstrual period every month, as it meant so much pain and suffering for me, but after I had used the Compound two months I became regular and natural and am now perfectly well and free from pain at my monthly periods. I am very grateful for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."

Such testimony should be accepted by all women as convincing evidence that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound stands without a peer as a remedy for all the distressing ills of women.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound rests upon the well-earned gratitude of American women.

When women are troubled with irregular, suppressed or painful menstruation, leucorrhœa, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, backache, bloating, (or flatulency), general debility, indigestion and nervous prostration, or are beset with such symptoms as dizziness, faintness, lassitude, excitability, irritability, nervousness, sleeplessness, melancholy, they should remember there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once removes such troubles. Refuse to buy any other medicine, for you need the best.

Don't hesitate to write to Mrs. Pinkham if there is anything about your sickness you do not understand. She will treat you with kindness and her advice is free. No woman ever regretted writing her and she has helped thousands. Address Lynn, Mass.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Insurance companies seeking reorganization should not overlook the fact that Russia has a complete set of Grand Dukes out of a job, suggests the Cleveland Leader.

Murders and homicides decreased more than 2,000 in the United States in the past ten years. Lynchings decreased one-half.

The resignation of Chief Procurator Constantine Petrovitch Pobiedonosteff quite obviously simplifies things in Russia, thinks the Boston Herald.

Something more than "platitudes of virture" is indeed in the fight for public honesty and moral courage, declared Edward M. Shepard in a letter read at the annual meeting of the Federation of Church Clubs.

He who brings forth two blades of grass, where but one grew before, performs a greater service for humanity than he who builds a city, asserts the Epitomist. There is nothing new in this thought for it has often been stated in similar words, but it will serve as a text in this as well as in the original form.

Railroad accidents in Chicago during the eleven months ended Nov. 1 cost 381 lives according to a report made by Coroner Hoffman, relates the New York World. The report also shows there were 1211 suicides in the country, 120 deaths due to street car accidents, 187 homicides, 10 killed by automobiles 201 deaths due to falls and 157 to burns and scalds.

The Secretary of Agriculture has discovered that about 40 per cent of the grass seed sold to the government is adulterated, says the Washington Post. The suburbanite who has been experimenting with the free seed graft will be anxious to have the other 60 per cent identified and labeled.

Barry Pain, in London Opinion, says: "I believe that more people read reviews than is generally supposed, at any rate in those papers where a high standard of reviewing is maintained. I know, for instance, that many men are opposed to the politics of the Daily Chronicle, yet take the paper regularly for the excellence of its literary page."

Dr. Elgin R. L. Gould recently gave a history of what might be called "The Three Ages of Graft." "First, he said, "graft was direct. Everybody grabbed what he wanted. The second stage shows us graft syndicated—legal advice and market tips were dealt out to the selected among the faithful. Third, graft was imperialized. Now the boss reserves all, or nearly all, for himself."

A scientist in the United States Agricultural Department, Dr. Cushman, relates the Philadelphia Record, announces that by an electrical process he can extract 8 per cent. of potash from the millions of tons of gneiss rock to be found in the country. At the same time a chemist in Denver has made another discovery—that the residuum from the refining of sugar betts can be converted into potash to such a degree that the sugar will be the by-product. Large quantities of potash are now imported chiefly from Germany. G

At the Mexican government financial agency it is estimated that $700,000,000 of American capital is invested in Mexico and the sum is growing rapidly, says the Philadelphia Record. English and French investments amount to about $50,000,000 each. Twenty-six companies with an aggregate capital of $10,000,000 have been registered in London in two years for working Mexican mines. Mexico is reaping the result of good credit and the protection of life and property.

The Norwegian majority for Prince Charles as King has kept up pretty close to its early promise and must be highly gratifying to the prospective monarch. It forms a fitting culmination to the episode of Scandinavian separation which has been conducted throughout with a sobriety, courtesy and general high-mindedness worthy of that strong and self-reliant race. No separation of two realms was ever more amicably effected, and no nation ever entered upon a career of independence more auspiciously, thinks the New York Tribune.

There is one general principle running through all the views of doctors in regard to disease. It is the importance of checking the growth of a variety of diseases in the interests of the physical fitness of the nation at large and not merely of the individual, remarks the Saturday Review. If this is to be done, many restraints, both legal and social, will have to be submitted to which at present are not imposed owing to the luck of an enlightened popular opinion. Sir James Crichton-Browne indicated one social restraint when speaking of the evil effects of alcohol. It is much to be wished, he said, that there should grow up one of those conventional understandings which are almost more binding than legal enactments, that it is bad form for a youth to indulge in alcohol till he has attained his majority.

BOX OF WAFERS FREE—NO DRUGS—CURES BY ABSORPTION.

Cures Belching of Gas—Foul Breath and Bad Stomach—Short Breath—Bleeding—Sour Eructations—Irregular Heart, Etc.

Take a Mull's Wafer any time of the day or night, and note the immediate good effect on your stomach. It absorbs the gas, disinfects the stomach, kills the poison germs and cures the disease. Catarrh of the head and throat, unwholesome food and overeating make bad stomachs. Scarcely any stomach is entirely free from taint of some kind. Mull's Anti-Belch Wafers will make your stomach healthy by absorbing foul gases which arise from the undigested food and by re-enforcing the lining of the stomach, enabling it to thoroughly mix the food with the gastric juices. This cures stomach trouble, promotes digestion, sweetens the breath, stops belching and fermentation. Heart action becomes strong and regular through this process.

Discard drugs, as you know from experience they do not cure stomach trouble. Try a common-sense (Nature's) method that does cure. A soothing, healing sensation results instantly.

We know Mull's Anti-Belch Wafers will do this, and we want you to know it.

"When our baby boy was three months old he had the milk crust very badly on his head, so that all the hair came out, and it itched so bad he would scratch until the blood ran. I got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of Cuticura Ointment. An Artistic Industry.

A flourishing industry for native women has been established in Bombay in the manufacture of artistic seed and bead articles. Women are taught to make beads out of the hard and various colored seeds to be found in the jungle and to make up the beads into necklaces, curtain loops, napkin rings, hatpins and many other ornamental articles. A cheap, simple and efficient machine for drilling the hard seeds has been devised after much experiment. The seed, which is most extensively used in India for necklaces and charms, is the rudraksha, a brown nut which seems to be much too hard a seed for insects of any kind to penetrate. It is worn as a sacred necklace by the followers of Shiva and has also a considerable ornamental alue.

One of the most useful instruments in use by surveyors is the odometer for measuring distances by the combination of a single wheel and a cyclometer. This is trundled along the ground in a straight line and the readings of the indicator show exactly the distance traversed. By this means the surface measurements are obtained with exactness even when the ground is so rolling as to be difficult of measurement in any other fashion, but the surveying party for determining the boundry between the English and French claims in the Sierre Leone soon found that the measurements were absrudly short of the probable distances. The perambulator was trundled by one of the natives attached to the party, and after some observation it was found that they could not comprehend the reason for trundling the odometer along the ground. They were willing to make concession to the white to the extent of pushing the wheel before them so long as they were in sight, but considering the order but a foolish prejudice against the native custom of "toting" everything upon the head, they were no sooner out of sight than they adopted the more comfortable mode. It was finally found necessary to send a white man with the native to insure proper measurements.

A slate quarryman living at Delta Pa., Humphrey G. Pritchard, has made a clock out of slate. The varieties he used include peach bottom blue slate and the red, green and purple slate of Vermont. About 164 separate pieces of this material were used in the construction and are held together by twenty-three dozen small metal screws. Many of the slate sheets are as thin as paper, and scores were broken before the timepiece was finished after eight months' work. The clock is four feet high, two feet wide and one foot deep. It has a cathedral gong and is lighted by nine incandescent bulbs.

Sold by all dealers. 50 cents a box. Foster-Milburn Co. Buffalo, N. Y.

The smallest coin in actual circulation is a sort of wafer made from a resinous juice and used by the natives in the Malay peninsula. It has a value of one ten-thousandth of one cent. The smallest metal coin is the Portuguese 3-reis piece, worth six-twenty-fifths of a cent, while the smallest English coin is a Gibraltar piece, the five millesima, worth one-quarter of a cent. There has been put into use in the canal zone a small silver coin worth about one penny, and this is probably the smallest silver piece ever coined.

No Limit!

You too would have to build bigger barns if you would only listen to reason and "increase your yields per acre" by enriching your soil and feeding your plants with that wonder-worker,

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizer.

It has been the tremendous success of many farmers all over the South, who started life with only a few acres and a one-horse plow. Now, after using these fertilizers for many years, these farmers are rich. Read what they say in our almanac. Ask your dealer for it, or send 2c. in stamps to pay cost of wrapping and postage on a copy. Be sure and ask for Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers, and accept no substitute.

HIGH CLASS DRUGGISTS AND — OTHERS.

The better class of druggists, everywhere, are men of scientific attainments and high integrity, who devote their lives to the welfare of their fellow men in supplying the best of remedies and purest medicinal agents of known value, in accordance with physicians' prescriptions and scientific formula. Druggists of the better class manufacture many excellent remedies, but always under original or officinal names and they never sell false brands, or imitation medicines. They are the men to deal with when in need of anything in their line, which usually includes all standard remedies and corresponding adjuncts of a first-class pharmacy and the finest and best of toilet articles and preparations and many useful accessories and remedial appliances. The earning of a fair living, with the satisfaction which arises from a knowledge of the benefits conferred upon their patrons and assistance to the medical profession, is usually their greatest reward for long years of study and many hours of daily toil. They all know that Syrup of Figs is an excellent laxative remedy and that it gives universal satisfaction, and therefore they are selling many millions of bottles annually to the well informed purchasers of the choicest remedies, and they always take pleasure in handing out the genuine article bearing the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package. They know that in cases of colds and headaches attended by biliousness and constipation and of weakness or torpidity of the liver and bowels, arising from irregular habits, indigestion or over-eating, that there is no other remedy so pleasant, prompt and beneficial in its effects as Syrup of Figs, and they are glad to sell it because it gives universal satisfaction.

Owing to the excellence of Syrup of Figs, the universal satisfaction which it gives and the immense demand for it, imitations have been made, tried and condemned, but there are individual druggists to be found, here and there, who do not maintain the dignity and principles of the profession and whose greed gets the better of their judgment, and who do not hesitate to recommend and try to sell the imitations in order to make a larger profit. Such preparations sometimes have the name—"Syrup of Figs"—or "Fig Syrup" and of some piratical concern, or fictitious fig syrup company, printed on the package, but they never have the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of the package. The imitations should be rejected because they are injurious to the system. In order to sell the imitations they find it necessary to resort to misrepresentation or deception, and whenever a dealer passes off on a customer a preparation under the name of "Syrup of Figs" or "Fig Syrup," which does not bear the full name of the California Fig Syrup Co. printed on the front of the package, he is attempting to deceive and mislead the patron who has been so unfortunate as to enter his establishment, whether it be large or small, for if the dealer resorts to misrepresentation and deception in one case he will do so with other medicinal agents, and in the filling of physicians' prescriptions, and should be avoided by every one who values health and happiness. Knowing that the great majority of druggists are reliable, we supply the immense demand for our excellent remedy entirely through the druggists, of whom it may be purchased everywhere, in original packages only, at the regular price of fifty cents per bottle, but as exceptions exist it is necessary to inform the public of the facts, in order that all may decline or return any imitation which may be sold to them. If it does not bear the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—printed on the front of every package, do not hesitate to return the article and to demand the return of your money, and in future go to one of the better class of druggists who will sell you what you wish and the best of everything in his line at reasonable prices.

Loveman, Joseph & Loeb

AT the present time the salaries of most college teachers are as high as the salaries of most clergymen of the cities or towns in which these colleges are placed. There are, of course, exceptions upon each side. In Cleveland, for instance, salaries are paid to clergymen higher than are paid to any college officer. But in Cambridge and Boston, as high salaries are paid to college officers as are paid to any clergyman. The higher salaries paid in the University of Chicago are probably about equal to the higher salaries paid to the clergymen of that city. Certain physicians, especially surgeons, earn larger amounts than are the stipends paid to any college man.

The same remark might be made respecting lawyers. But the salaries paid to editors are, on the whole, not so large as those paid to college professors. It would usually, also, I suppose, be acknowledged that there are other elements in the work of an editor, some more agreeable, others less agreeable, than are many parts of college teaching. On the basis, therefore, of Adam Smith's principles, it is hard to make an argument for larger pay for college professors. On the basis of temporary conditions and feelings of individual needs and relationships, it would be easy to make an argument. But the principles are permanent, the feelings and conditions temporary. It should, however, be said that it would be advantageous to the community for professorship to command a larger salary, because the college would, through a term of years, be able to command a finer type of the man, of the scholar and of the gentleman. College places should never be so rich as to become objects of avariciousness but they should be made so full and noble as to become objects of worthy ambition for human service.—Harper's Weekly.

Witte Offers to Resign.

Berlin.—A dispatch to the Tageblatt from St. Petersburg, received here by way of Eydtkuhenen, East Prussia, says Premier Witte has given his resignation to the emperor, who refused to accept it.

THE NEW BRITISH CABINET

Arthur J. Balfour Resigns as Premier With His Ministers.

Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman the New Leader—Honors For Those Retiring From Body.

London, England.—The political crisis in the United Kingdom reached a climax when Arthur J. Balfour, the Premier, formally handed in the resignations of himself and the members of his Cabinet to King Edward, who accepted them. His Majesty invited Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman to an interview. Sir Henry arrived in town from Scotland, and the Liberal statesmen were hurriedly summoned from all parts of the kingdom to confer with him.

A brief official announcement was made that the Cabinet had resigned, that the King had accepted the resignations of his Ministers and that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman had been sent for.

It would now appear that the entire programme had been cut and dried for some time, and it is even probable that the Liberal leader had already completed his Cabinet.

The meeting of the Privy Council has been postponed.

A part list of the honors usually conferred on the retirement of a government was issued. It includes a peerage for Sir Thomas Sanderson, the retiring Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and several minor honors. It is expected that the honors to be conferred on prominent members of the retiring government will be announced shortly.

Has Policy Prepared.

One thing is certain—that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman has explained his attitude on home rule for Ireland to those Liberal leaders who are known to be opposed to home rule on the lines of the last bills introduced in Parliament. Since his speech in Stirling, which raised such a furor, Sir Henry has not made any statement, but it is confidently asserted in the Liberal clubs that he is ready with a policy which will gain the adhesion of the Nationalists and at the same time avoid raising the issue as one of the most prominent planks in his platform.

There is some uncertainty as to when the dissolution of Parliament will be effective, but it is not considered probable until after the new year.

An interesting feature of the political situation is the prospect of a closer alliance between the Irish and the Labor parties in the new Parliament. James Keir Hardie, the Socialist and independent member, in a political speech, frankly invited such an alliance. He pointed out that forty-five Labor members, combined with seventy-five Irish members, would provide a voting strength which no government, however strong, could afford to ignore.

COTTON SAVES STATE CREDIT.

Product of Convict Labor Sold in Time to Prevent Deficit.

Jackson, Miss. — Governor Vardaman, of Mississippi, sold a large quantity of cotton which had been raised on the State farms by the convicts just in the nick of time to prevent a deficit in the State Treasury. The sale netted about $12,000, which will go to the educational fund. The balance in the treasury of Mississippi is now below the $10,000 mark, and heavy drafts are expected soon.

Governor Vardaman has entire charge of the sale of all the products of the State farms, and it is probable that from now on for several months the cotton and other products will be disposed of to prevent the State from delaying payment on its obligations.

Settlement Not Made.

VOL III. CLANTON, ALA., DECEMBER 21 1905 NO. 39

On the Morning of Christ's Nativity

This is the month, and this the happy morn,
Wherein the Son of heaven's eternal King,
Of wedded Maid and Virgin Mother born,
Our great redemption from above did bring;
For so the holy sages once did sing,
That He our deadly forfeit should release,
And with His Father work us a perpetual peace.

That glorious form, that light unsufferable,
And that far-beaming blaze of majesty,
Wherewith He wont at heaven's high council table
To sit in the midst of Trinal Unity,
He laid aside, and here with us to be,
Forsook the courts of everlasting day,
And chose with us a darksome house of mortal clay.

—Milton.

The Ancestry of "Santa Claus"

THE jolly, potbellied, roistering old Santa Claus is in hot water. Preachers and parents are rising up against him, declaring that he is a fraud and as such ought to be suppressed. Thank heaven, a sporadic agitation like this can have no serious results. Recalcitrant parents and preachers will pass away. Santa Claus will endure until the end, as he has endured from the beginning.

No one can say how old he is or at what period he made his first appearance among prehistoric men. The name of Santa Claus, by which he is known in America, is the Dutch pet name for St. Nicholas. The name Criss Cringle, by which he is known in England, is a corruption of Christ Kindlein, or the Christ child. But the festivities that distinguish Christmas existed long before Christianity, and a jolly god of good cheer appears as the personification of the period from the earliest pagan times. Now, the Santa Claus of to-day is simply that old jolly god sobered up, washed and purified.

The Dionysia of the Greeks, the Saturnalia of the Romans, the Twelve Nights of the old Norsemen and of the Teutons all celebrated the coming of the winter solstice. People then gave themselves up to all sorts of revelry and excess. In the Dionysia the representative figure was not the young Dionysus or Bacchus, but the aged, cheery and disreputable Silenus, the chief of the Satyrs, or the god of drunkards. In the Saturnalia it was Saturn, in the Germanic feasts it was Thor, both long bearded and white haired gods like Silenus.

Now, although the central figure of the Christian festival is the child God, the Christ Kindlein, the influence of long pagan custom was too strong within the breasts of the early Christians to be easily superseded. The tradition of hoary age as the true representative of the dying year and its attendant jollifications still remained smoldering under the ashes of the past. It burst into new flame when the past was too far back to be looked upon with the fear and antagonism of the church, and there seemed no longer any danger of a relapse into paganism. At first, however, the more dignified representative was chosen as more in keeping with the occasion. Saturn was unconsciously rebaptized as St. Nicholas, the name of the saint whose festival occurs in December, and who, as the patron of young people, is especially fitted for the patronage of the festival which has come to be looked upon as especially that of the young. At first St. Nicholas did not supersede the Christ child, but accompanied Him in His Christmas travels, as, indeed, he still does in certain rural neighborhoods of Europe where the modern spirit has been least felt.

St. Nicholas, according to the hagiologists, was a bishop of Myra, who flourished early in the fourth century. He is the patron of children and schoolboys.

It is strange that everywhere St. Nicholas is most honored and his feast day most observed the most pious and instructed among the common people know little of the legend of the saint. He is treated with that mixture of seriousness and frivolity which becomes a dying myth. One masquerades in his dress in the evening and prays to him in the morning, and so fulfils a duty without spoiling the fun. Yet even the mumming has an educational purpose.

THE GERMAN SANTA CLAUS.

In Southern Germany and Austria a youth possessing the necessary religious knowledge is masked, dressed in long white vestments, with a silk scarf and furnished with a miter and crozier. He is accompanied by two angels and a whole troop of devils. The angels are dressed much like the choir boys in Anglican or Catholic churches. Each carries a basket. The devils blacken their faces and add horns of pigs' snouts or such other fantastic devices as the ingenuity of boyhood can devise. They are girt with chains, which they shake or rattle furiously. It is thought much better fun to be a devil than an angel, hence the number of the former is only limited to the number of boys who are able to command the necessary regalia. In the twilight of the evening of December 5 the good bishop and his suite begin their round of visits. It is the season for juvenile parties, and almost all the children of the village are collected in a few separate houses, each of which St. Nicholas visits in turn. He enters with the two angels, while his swarthy followers are left to play their pranks outside. A great silence falls upon the children, and one by one they are called up and examined by the saint. This part of the evening's business is carried on with the greatest seriousness and decorum. Simple religious questions suited to the age of each child are propounded, after which it has to sing hymns and recite prayers. If the ordeal is successfully passed the angels present it with nuts and apples. If it fails it has to stand aside. When the examination is ended the devils are called in.

They are not allowed to approach the good children, but may tease and frighten the naughty ones as much as they like. They do this at first as a matter of duty. Duty is followed by the pleasures whose anticipation had caused them to enlist—pleasures which consist in strange dances and antics, and in pursuing the larger girls with the attempt to blacken their faces. Their whole appearance is intended to be grotesque and farcical. For the entire evening they are allowed full license in the villages, though in some of the towns the festival has, for good reasons, been prohibited. For weeks before the eve of St. Nicholas a devil may occasionally be seen at the window of some cottage where the children are supposed to be naughty or

When St. Nicholas has left the children return to their own homes, but they do not believe that the generosity of the saintly bishop has been exhausted. After saying their prayers and going to bed they place dishes or baskets upon the windowsill, with their names written within them, and in these their parents deposit small presents, which their little sons and daughters fancy he has brought.

In many places the bugbear overshadows in importance both the Christ child and St. Nicholas. He appears under different names and in different guises. In Lower Austria he is the frightful Krampus, with his clanking chains and horrible devil's mask, who, notwithstanding his gilded nuts and apples, gingerbread and toys, which he carries in his basket, is the terror of the nursery. In Hanover, Holstein and Mecklenburg he is known as Clas. In Silesia his name is Joseph.

Sometimes the bugbear was a female. In Lower Austria she was called the Budelfrau. In Suabia it was the Berchtel who chastised children that did not spin diligently with rods, but rewarded the industrious with dried pears, apples and nuts.

The female bogie survives, especially in Russia and in Italy. In the former place she is known as the Baboushka, in the latter as the Befana. Befana is a corruption of Epiphania or Epiphany. For it is on Epiphany, January 6, that the Italians make presents to their children in commemoration of the gifts given by the three wise men to Christ on that date.—New York Herald.

Christmas Eve in Brittany: the Little Carol Singers.

When the average visitor arrives in Brittany for the first time he generally rubs his eyes to find out whether he is asleep or awake, for he discovers a land so novel in its aspect, a people so quaint in manners, customs and clothes, that it all seems like a dream from which he will presently awake to the nineteenth century he certainly leaves once the confines of this land are passed. Think of a low, flat country, with a strange growth of gnarled, queer-looking trees, of great stretches of plains with dark, surging grasses, only now and then a low hovel of a thatched stone house, in which the natives and their live stock, particularly the pigs, dwell together.

It is a place of little joy of living, for the land is ungrateful, and it requires all the energies of the husbandman to get even the smallest return for his work. The poverty is appalling and beggary is on all sides. The peasants rarely eat meat because of its cost. They live mainly on a soggy black bread, which is broken up into a soup made of a piece of suet stewed in boiling water. When the sardine is in season it is added, although this fish is generally eaten broiled, and when the chestnut comes all hands stuff at all hours of the day. The children dress just like the grown folks, and for both a single dress is kept most of their lives for the best, while on every day their collection of garments, save with the better classes, is remarkable.

But there are interesting customs that happen there, and have happened for, lo, these many years, since there is little change in Brittany. That of feeding the poor is a significant one, taking place on Christmas Eve, as well as at other times. Here comes the little ones of the poor to get their pieces of black bread and the bonne of the good cure distributes without prejudice to all comers. The clank of the sabots is heard along the stone streets as these unfortunate children tramp up to the rectory, and the picturesqueness of the scene is emphasized by the opera bouffe clothes the suppliants wear.

their elder sister is known to be particularly attractive. It is proof of the sound nerves of the children that no harm comes from the ordeal.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

The resignation of Chief Procurator Constantine Petrovitch Pobiedonosteff quite obviously simplifies things in Russia, thinks the Boston Herald.

Insurance companies seeking reorganization should not overlook the fact that Russia has a complete set of Grand Dukes out of a job, suggests the Cleveland Leader.

He who brings forth two blades of grass, where but one grew before, performs a greater service for humanity than he who builds a city, asserts the Epitomist. There is nothing new in this thought for it has often been stated in similar words, but it will serve as a text in this as well as in the original form.

Railroad accidents in Chicago during the eleven months ended Nov. 1 cost 381 lives according to a report made by Coroner Hoffman, relates the New York World. The report also shows there were 1211 suicides in the country, 120 deaths due to street car accidents, 187 homicides, 10 killed by automobiles 201 deaths due to falls and 157 to burns and scalds.

The Secretary of Agriculture has discovered that about 40 per cent of the grass seed sold to the government is adulterated, says the Washington Post. The suburbanite who has been experimenting with the free seed graft will be anxious to have the other 60 per cent identified and labeled.

Barry Pain, in London Opinion, says: "I believe that more people read reviews than is generally supposed, at any rate in those papers where a high standard of reviewing is maintained. I know, for instance, that many men are opposed to the politics of the Daily Chronicle, yet take the paper regularly for the excellence of its literary page."

Dr. Elgin R. L. Gould recently gave a history of what might be called "The Three Ages of Graft." "First, he said, "graft was direct. Everybody grabbed what he wanted. The second stage shows us graft syndicated—legal advice and market tips were dealt out to the selected among the faithful. Third, graft was imperialized. Now the boss reserves all, or nearly all, for himself."

A scientist in the United States Agricultural Department, Dr. Cushman, relates the Philadelphia Record, announces that by an electrical process he can extract 8 per cent. of potash from the millions of tons of gneiss rock to be found in the country. At the same time a chemist in Denver has made another discovery—that the residuum from the refining of sugar betts can be converted into potash to such a degree that the sugar will be the by-product. Large quantities of potash are now imported chiefly from Germany. G

At the Mexican government financial agency it is estimated that $700,000,000 of American capital is invested in Mexico and the sum is growing rapidly, says the Philadelphia Record. English and French investments amount to about $50,000,000 each. Twenty-six companies with an aggregate capital of $10,000,000 have been registered in London in two years for working Mexican mines. Mexico is reaping the result of good credit and the protection of life and property.

The Norwegian majority for Prince Charles as King has kept up pretty close to its early promise and must be highly gratifying to the prospective monarch. It forms a fitting culmination to the episode of Scandinavian separation which has been conducted throughout with a sobriety, courtesy and general high-mindedness worthy of that strong and self-reliant race. No separation of two realms was ever more amicably effected, and no nation ever entered upon a career of independence more auspiciously, thinks the New York Tribune.

There is one general principle running through all the views of doctors in regard to disease. It is the importance of checking the growth of a variety of diseases in the interests of the physical fitness of the nation at large and not merely of the individual, remarks the Saturday Review. If this is to be done, many restraints, both legal and social, will have to be submitted to which at present are not imposed owing to the luck of an enlightened popular opinion. Sir James Crichton-Browne indicated one social restraint when speaking of the evil effects of alcohol. It is much to be wished, he said, that there should grow up one of those conventional understandings which are almost more binding than legal enactments, that it is bad for a youth to indulge in alcohol before he has attained his majority. The Sacred Bough.

Mistletoe seems now inseparable from Christmas, but it was not always so. The use of the mistletoe in our Christmas festivities is generally conceded to be a survival of Druidic ceremonial. Looking back now, we can see that to this worship of the mistletoe, and the wonderful cures the Druids effected by means of it, was due much to the veneration in which they themselves were held. To them it was of Divine origin, possessing powers of healing and curing disease that gave it the name of "curer of all ills," or the "all-heal." The ceremonial rites connected with the worship of the mistletoe were performed on a scale of great magnificence, in the sacred month of December, during the feast that ushered in the New Year. The time for the beginning of these rites was announced by the priests, who went about shouting outside the houses, "New all-heal, new all-heal!" or "The New Year is at hand, gather the mistletoe." The cry was followed by the congregating of the people in great crowds, to follow the priests in solemn procession, as all went into the woods to search for the sacred plant. Two white bulls were taken for sacrificial purposes, while the three most ancient pontiffs carried respectively a bowl of bread, wine and water, and a hand of ivory attached to a wand, this representing power and justice. It must have been an imposing procession, with the ancient pontiffs in full ceremonial costume leading the way, followed by the bards and priests of various ranks, each in the costume of his order, and following these the people, all eager to find the mystic plant that was a panacea against all ills and the true source of happiness to all who could possess it.

THE YULE-TIDE GREETING

O'er the hills night shadows steal;
Scarce a light breeze stirs;
See the Virgin mild
Clasps her new-born Child!
Round the manger shepherds kneel—
Humble worshipers.
Hark! angels sing
Round their heavenly King!
'Tis for man and not for them,
Sleeps the Babe in Bethlehem.

Thou whose head to earth is lowly
Bowed in woe and shame
When no help seems nigh
To thy piteous cry.
Think! it was not for the holy
The Redeemer came.
Hark! angels sing
Round their heavenly King!
For earth's sinful and defiled
Comes to-night the Saviour Child.

He who to the cradle brings
One pure, generous thought
To the infant there
Brings gifts more rare
Than the gold and myrrh the kings
Of the Orient brought.
Hark! angels sing
Round their heavenly King!
'Tis for man and not for them,
Sleeps the Babe in Bethlehem.

THORA'S HAPPY THOUGHT

BY KILDOVRNE COWLES

"NO Christmas this year," that was what father had said to mother. Thora, who was washing the supper dishes heard him say it and she told Selma and Orlof.

"Why, Christmas must come every year," said little Selma, opening wide her big blue eyes.

"Not when the tobacco isn't sold," explained Orlof, who helped his father on the small farm. "Father's borrowed money on the crop to live on, and now the money's 'most gone and the crop isn't sold yet. The buyers are slow this year."

"I don't see why any one ever buys the horrid stuff," said Thora. "The smell of the leaves drying in the shed makes me sick."

"Well, next summer you won't be troubled with it, for father and I are going to put the land into sugar beets," remarked Orlof, who felt himself a man of affairs. "Then we are sure to make money, because a beet sugar factory has just been built at Janesville, and the owners will buy all the beets we can raise."

"But what's that got to do with Christmas?" asked Selma.

"There won't be any Christmas here," said Orlof, solemnly. "I knew it first, for father told grandmother this morning that there was no money to spend for nonsense, and grandmother — why, grandmother just cried." There was a suspicious moisture in the boy's own eyes. The gentle little grandmother who had never learned English, and who spent the days knitting the soft stockings and mittens that the young Oversons found so comfortable and warm during the Wisconsin winters, was very dear to Orlof and his sisters.

"There won't be many more Christmases for grandmother," sighed thoughtful Thora; "she is getting very feeble."

"Then it isn't right for us not to have Christmas this year!" exclaimed Selma. "If there aren't many Christmases left, she oughtn't to miss a single one."

"No, and we won't let her. As sure as my name is Thora Overson, grandmother shall have the best Christmas this year that she's had since she left Norway. We'll earn the money for it ourselves."

"But how can we?" asked Selma.

"Oh, we'll find a way," replied Thora, with a happy smile.

Perhaps Orlof and Selma went to sleep that night as soon as their flaxen heads touched their pillows, but not so with Thora. Her long yellow braids were tossing for two hours or more after she had crept into bed beside little Lars, the two-year-old baby. Her head turned from side to side as she worked out a plan in her mind that kept even the thought of sleep away. But at last, reaching to see that the covers were over the baby, she sighed contentedly and closed her tired eyes.

"You, please, wash the dishes for mother this morning, Selma, and tend to baby," she said to her sister after breakfast the next day, "for I have something else to do."

Thora went to the upper room where the children slept, and did not come down until it was time to go to school. Then she carried a little parcel, laughingly refusing to tell what it contained when Selma and Orlof asked her.

After school that afternoon she told Selma to hurry home to help get supper, for she was going to the village on an errand. When she trudged home an hour later her mind was so full of happy thoughts and plans that the three miles of rough country roads seemed but a short, pleasant walk. Her bright cheeks and sparkling eyes were noticed by the grandmother when she came into the house.

"The little woman is happy to-night," she said in Norwegian.

"Yes, grandmother, dear," Thora answered in the same tongue, "happy and busy." She laid off her wraps and undoing the little parcel she had carried away in the morning showed her grandmother a short piece of crocheted lace of a most intricate design. "I'm going to make yards and yards of this," she said. "How glad I am that you taught me to crochet."

"But I never taught you that pattern, Thora. I know only the easy, simple edges that we made in Norway when I was young like you. Where did you learn such a beautiful pattern?"

"I lay awake for a while last night and made it up."

"Why, it's wonderful," the grandmother fingered the filmy meshes. "Is it for Christmas, dear?"

"Yes, and you mustn't ask any more questions about it, for it's a secret."

At first Thora wished to surprise father and mother, as well as grandmother, but wise Orlof made her see that it would be better to let them have a part in making grandmother's Christmas happy. When Mr. and Mrs. Overson learned that Thora had earned $5.40 crocheting lace for one of the village shops, and that Ole was receiving seventy-five cents a week for doing a neighbor's chores each night and morning, they looked at each other in wonder.

"I think we starve never more now," said Mrs. Overson, "with children which hard work so good."

Mr. Overson did not answer. He turned away from the eager young faces of his children and the proud gaze of his wife. After a moment's silence he said, "I was wrong when I said there would be no Christmas. There is always Christmas where hearts are warm and generous."

What a bustle there was the last few days before Christmas Eve! Mr. Overson, with Thora and Orlof, drove to town in the old bobsled and came home laden with packages. Selma stoned raisins for the Norwegian holiday soup made of wine, raisins, prunes and sago. Thora made the lefse (Christmas bread) and cooked the favorite Norwegian fish, the ludefisk, which is brought to this country for the children of Norway who have found homes here. She stewed into delicious sauce the ruby-colored tyttebar berries, which come all the way from Norway dried. Father Overson brewed the harmless home-made beer, without which no Norwegian Christmas is complete, and Mrs. Overson baked a huge jarful of the Yule cakes.

All this time the little grandmother sat by the sitting room stove, near the window, knitting her memories into the long socks for Orlof, and oftentimes weaving a tear that fell softly upon her work as the thoughts of happy days never to return overwhelmed her. Sometimes she fancied that she actually smelled the roasting spare ribs or the ludefisk, so clear was the memory of the old feasts. When she told Orlof this he laughed aloud, and she smiled gently, for she was not hurt that he should find his old grandmother amusing. But she wondered when he went into the kitchen why he shut the door so quickly after him.

The morning before Christmas Mr. Overson and Orlof went out with hatchets and smuggled into the house great branches of the Norway pine which grew on their place.

At supper time when grandmother came into the sitting room after the nap that now she so often found she could not do without, she noticed the Christmas green, and a happy light came into her faded, patient eyes, but it was quickly followed by a sigh.

Then her son, the big man for whom in his childhood she had left the land of her youth, chided her for sighing.

"Make glad Yule!" he cried, leading her to the head of the table, which she suddenly saw was heaped with all the Christmas goodies that had marked old Yule feasts at home in Norway.

"Make glad Yule!" shouted all the children at once, even little Lars' voice joining in the happy chorus. Then each one asked for grandmother's blessing, and when it was given with tears and smiles, they all sang a Christmas hymn in Norwegian as they sat down at the table.

"Look at your presents, grandmother," said Selma. "See the lovely felt slippers I bought you with the money Thora gave me for doing her work."

Grandmother looked down at her plate in surprise. Many gifts were arranged around it. There were the slippers, a gay little shoulder shawl, a pretty lace collar and a quaint and beautiful silk kerchief of an old pattern, which grandmother looked at in especial wonder, for never on this side of the ocean had she seen its like.

"It was my mother's," Mrs. Overson explained. "My father brought it to her from Christiania when I was a baby. She never wore it except on holidays or when her babies were christened."

"But it is not for me," remonstrated grandmother.

"Yes, for you. I want to see it tied over your head as my mother wore it. You are my mother, too, and it should be yours."

Mr. Overson kissed his wife. Christmas had brought to him a happiness long desired. His wife had at last taken his mother into the heart that had been grieving for her own mother long dead.

The kerchief was tied over grandmother's head amid exclamations of delight and admiration.

"Isn't she dear and sweet?" asked Thora, smiling at the happy group.

"It is my children and grandchildren who are dear and sweet. God bless them," said grandmother reverently.—The Little Chronicle.

A Christmas Chime.

Keep time, keep time, glad Christmas chime!
Loud, louder, sing thy song sublime;
Ne'er half enough can e'er be told
Of that dear story, sweet and old.
Hark, men and women—children, too—
List to the wondrous tale anew,
How long ago, in land afar,
The shepherds saw the shining star;
Heard echoed strains of harp and lyre,
Attuned to thrill of angel choir.

Keep time, keep time, wild, joyful chime!
Bid every heart keep Christmas time—
Let there be none so worn and weary,
Let there be none so lone and dreary,
That thy rich music may not fill
With happiness and fond good will;
With just a bit of hope and cheer,
A firmer trust in heaven near,
A sense of sacred, new-found rest,
That Jesus sleeps on Mary's breast.

Keep time, keep time, blest Christmas chime!
Repeat thy message true, sublime,
Unto the mighty, to the lowly,
Unto the sinner, to the holy—
Bid them live on in gentle peace,
Their strife and hatred all to cease;
And bid them come, not as of old
With frankincense, myrrh, gems and gold,
But with the nobler—love's own proffer—
Unto their God their hearts to offer.

The Real Reason For the Mistletoe Kiss

Here is the real historic reason for a very pretty custom that should never be allowed to die out. It is the good old Christmas custom of kissing a girl when you catch her under the mistletoe. Here is the legend:

Balder, the Scandanavian god of poetry and eloquence, was protected from the violence of his enemies by the promise of everything in earth, fire and water not to harm him. The mistletoe only had not been asked, and Loake, his enemy, discovering this, got another man to shoot him with an arrow formed of it. Then all the gods and goddesses mourned grievously, because he was so greatly loved. So to the Goddess of Love the mistletoe was given to guard and keep, and every one passing underneath the bough she held kissed her as a sign that henceforth the branch was an emblem not of death, but of love.

And always intimately and affectionately attached to the mistletoe Christmas kiss is the charming sad story of the wedding day of Ginevra, the beautiful daughter of the gallant Lord Lovel. The guests were assembled, the bride was joyous, radiant, even mischievous. She would hide herself, pretend she did not want nor mean to be kissed under the great mistletoe bough that hung in her father's ancestral halls.

So she ran away from the merry throng, and, spying a great oak chest that nobody ever used, slipped into it and shut the lid. Alas! it fastened with a spring that opened only from the outside. In vain she shrieked, in vain battered her little heels against those heavy planks. That oaken chest was the young bride's coffin.

The Going Forth.

Now far along the darkened sward
The winter snow is white.
I will go forth to meet my Lord
And welcome Him to-night.
The solemn stars in heaven wait;
The swaying sea is dim.
I will go out beyond my gate
And find my way to Him.

In lighted fanes the choirs of praise
Lift up their anthem sweet,
I will go forth along the ways
To find and clasp His feet.
Across my hearth the night winds moan;
My doors are opened wide.
Into the night I pass alone
To find my Christmas-tide.
—Mabel Earle, in Harper's Bazar.

Prince Peter Kuropatkin, the famous Russian social reformer, now resides at Bromley, England. He belongs to one of the proudest and oldest Russian families. It is said that he had a better claim to the throne than Alexander II. His career has been unique. As a boy he wished to study music, but was discouraged by his father, who told him that all a man required to learn of music was how to turn over the pages for a lady. He has been in turn soldier, explorer and geographer, prison reformer, revolutionist, scientist and litterateur. There is much food for reflection in the fact that, although he is now an exile, he was once in such favor at the Russian court that he was appointed chamberlain to the czarina.

Dolls as Educators.

A novel idea has been realized in Paris by M. Leo Claretie, who, besides being an eminent educationist, is an ardent advocate of rendering education attractive. His system of the history of France in dressed dolls is to be placed on public exhibition as an object lesson in its capabilities. Even the prehistoric periods, whose life can only be known on the testimony of the rocks, are represented. Within the pale of history every age is represented by its leading figures, as Gaul, pro-Roman, Roman and Frankish. Then come the crusades, the English wars, the later middle ages, the early modern period, and so on to the third republic.

A Portable Soup Tureen in London.

Hundreds of portable soup tureens have been brought into service by an association organized for charitable purposes in the Hammersmith district of London. The object is to supply all who may be in need of immediate sustenance with hot soup and bread at the cost of a penny. The scheme became so popular at once that the demand could not be supplied and the number of soup barrows was increased by the hundred. It has already been demonstrated that the association will be kept active in the administration of its charity.

Remarkable Statue of Satan.

A curious statue was set up in a street near his dwelling by an eccentric German citizen of Detroit. It is dedicated to Satan and is dominated by a figure of the father of lies. It is a fair example of modern sculpture but the city authorities object to its presence in a public thoroughfare, and it will be removed. The Detroit Turnverein recently visited the statue in a body and drank toasts to owner and sculptor.

A scientific commission which has been investigating the peculiarities of the Mediterranean or Malta fever has come upon evidence which shows that the infection of the disease may be transmitted by goats. Dr. Zammit and Major Horrocks found the specific organism of the fever in the milk of goats that were apparently healthy. The blood of several of the goats gave a reaction which is peculiar to the fever. This finding is not only important for Malta, but for many other places within the Mediterranean area. Gibraltar is one of those where this fever is very prevalent, and goat's milk almost the only source of the milk supply.

The dependence of underground water-supply upon rainfall was clearly shown by the government survey of the drainage basin of the Arkansas River in Kansas last summer. It was found that the underflow has its origin in the rainfall on the sand-hills to the south and the bottom-lands and plains to the north of the river. In times of flood the river itself contributes to the underground flow. When the river was high the underground water was found, by means of electrical measurements, to be moving away from the river channel at the rate of about 8 feet in 24 hours. The general movement of the underground water is from 8 to 11 feet in 24 hours.

A New Father Damien.

W. H. P. Anderson, a young Canadian, who has renounced all the pleasures of the world and decided to devote his life to ministering to lepers, has, according to the London Express, just left England for India.

Since the days of heroic Father Damien no man has given up his life and his career to undertake this work, and the occasion is at once notable and touching. True, the Mission to lepers has ministers in India, who from time to time drift into leper work. But these men go among the outcasts from time to time merely because their work calls theme there now and again.

The station to which Mr. Anderson goes is Chandkuri, in Central India, midway between Calcutta and Bombay. The lepers' settlement lies twenty miles from the railroad track, and is practically isolated.

That he may preach the Gospel to the five hundred outcasts at Chandkuri Mr. Anderson is now learning the vernacular; but, apart from his spiritual ministry, the Mission to Lepers, under whose auspices he goes, has much for him to do, and relics much upon his business capacity.

SCIENTIFIC & INDUSTRIAL

Some very small West Indian fish, locally known as "millions," are thriving in the Zoological Gardens, London.

More than 10,000 photographs of birds amid their natural surroundings have been taken by an English naturalist. Some of them entailed as much as a week of waiting and watching.

The Paris correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writes that, thanks to the recent Anti-Tuberculosis Congress there, half the people of Paris are at this moment suffering from imaginary tuberculosis.

The West's gold output may be doubled by the invention of a resident of Colorado City. It is a simple machine for saving flour gold, is run by a gasoline engine, and may be taken anywhere. Experiments on twice treated tailings or mine refuse show an accumulation of five and one-half pounds of gold in ten days.

A scientific commission which has been investigating the peculiarities of the Mediterranean or Malta fever has come upon evidence which shows that the infection of the disease may be transmitted by goats. Dr. Zammit and Major Horrocks found the specific organism of the fever in the milk of goats that were apparently healthy. The blood of several of the goats gave a reaction which is peculiar to the fever. This finding is not only important for Malta, but for many other places within the Mediterranean area. Gibraltar is one of those where this fever is very prevalent, and goats are almost the only source of the milk supply.

The dependence of underground water supply upon rainfall was clearly shown by the government survey of the drainage basin of the Arkansas River in Kansas last summer. It was found that the underflow has its origin in the rainfall on the sand-hills to the south and the bottom-lands and plains to the north of the river. In times of flood the river itself contributes to the underground flow. When the river was high the underground water was found, by means of electrical measurements, to be moving away from the river channel at the rate of about 8 feet in 24 hours. The general movement of the underground water is from 8 to 11 feet in 24 hours.

A New Father Damien.

W. H. P. Anderson, a young Canadian, who has renounced all the pleasures of the world and decided to devote his life to ministering to lepers, has, according to the London Express, just left England for India.

Since the days of heroic Father Damien no man has given up his life and his career to undertake this work, and the occasion is at once notable and touching. True, the Mission to lepers has ministers in India, who from time to time drift into leper work. But these men go among the outcasts from time to time merely because their work calls them there now and again.

The station to which Mr. Anderson goes is Chandkuri, in Central India, midway between Calcutta and Bombay. The lepers' settlement lies twenty miles from the railroad track, and is practically isolated.

That he may preach the Gospel to the five hundred outcasts at Chandkuri Mr. Anderson is now learning the vernacular; but, apart from his spiritual ministry, the Mission to Lepers, under whose auspices he goes, has much for him to do, and relies much upon his business capacity.

THE SONG OF A SILLY OPTIMIST

I'm just a silly optimist with cheerfulness galore,
For I'm tired of hearing people say that everything's a bore.
I'm tired of melancholy moans, and so I point with pride
To the awe-inspiring axiom that I am satisfied.

If there's anything I love to eat, it's food,
If there's anything I love to wear, it's clothes,
And in times of relaxation
I have proved by demonstration
That there's nothing quite so restful as repose.

Let Ibsen, Tolstoi, Schopenhauer depict our life as dark,
But I cannot help believing that existence is a lark.
That all the crimes and meannesses that in this world are done
Are committed in a spirit of exuberance and fun.

And there's nothing that I love to talk like words,
And there's nothing that I love to sing like songs;
So I find a life employment
In the pleasures of enjoyment,
Placing sadness in the sphere where it belongs.

VAL WARYNG'S MISTAKE

By Florence E. Eastwick.

A GIRL sat with her hands clasped round her knees, staring out of the window with unseeing eyes—her thoughts far away. Behind her the room was almost dark, but a rosy glow slanted through the low casement and touched her bright brown hair into threads of gold. A man coming swiftly into the room hesitated for a moment in the doorway, then, with a whimsical expression of amusement in his eyes, went forward softly, and, putting a hand under her chin, kissed her upturned face. But, as his lips touched hers, he recoiled with a start; her face was unknown to him, and at the same moment the girl sprang from her seat, thrusting him from her with both hands. The color swept from her throat to her forehead, her blue eyes blazed, her slender figure was tense with indignation.

"How dare you!" she said, passionately; and he, for a moment, had no reply ready. He was completely taken aback, but managed at last to stammer out:

"I'm very sorry. I'm afraid I've made a mistake!"

"That you certainly have!" was the emphatic retort, and then, with a flash of scorn from the blue eyes, she was gone.

"Just my bad luck!" Val Waryng muttered. It certainly seemed unlucky that, after five years absence, he should manage to make a fauxpas on the moment of arriving home.

"Val, my dear boy!" a voice said from the doorway, and his mother came toward him with outstretched hands. He took her in his arms and she drew his head down and kissed him on both cheeks. Then she held him away from her and scrutinized his face. "You've grown a beard, Val!" she said, reproachfully. "It makes you look dreadfully old."

He laughed.

"I knew you wouldn't like it, and I meant to take it off before seeing you, but we reached port sooner than we expected, and I rushed to catch the midday express."

"Ah, that is how you came to-day instead of to-morrow, when we expected you. You are very welcome, my dear boy, but it's so dark I cannot see you properly; we'll have a light."

As the match fired, he noticed that her face was thinner and more transparent in its fair delicacy of complexion than when he went away; so small and fragile a being, and yet possessed of great strength of will, as he knew to his cost—witness his banishment to a far land when the headstrong follies of his youth had threatened his future career.

"I am sorry to tell you there is a disappointment in store for you, Val," she said, when the gas was lighted. "Gladys has gone away; she left here yesterday to stay with some relations. She gave me this note for you. I think she might really have postponed her visit when she heard you were coming home, but Gladys is so different from other girls."

"Yes, Gladys is quite different from other girls," he repeated, with a slightly cynical inflection in his voice. He was turning the letter round and round in his hands absently; then he added: "Who was the girl I found sitting here? I thought for a moment she was Gladys when I came in."

"The girl? Oh, you mean Francie! Why, surely you could not mistake her for Gladys; they are utterly unlike? I told you all about her long ago, Val—don't you remember? She was bequeathed to my care by my cousin, Miriam Vane, when she died two years ago, and Francie has lived with me ever since."

"Oh, but you said a child! I imagined quite a little girl, not a tall, young woman like this. I'm afraid I offended her when I arrived."

"Did she run away? She is rather shy, but a dear girl. She has been a great comfort to me in my loneliness; but you want to read your letter, Val!"

He tore open the envelope, and, going over to the light, stood there reading. The expression on his face deepened suddenly to gravity, and a line appeared between his eyebrows which made him look strangely like his mother. She was watching him anxiously while he tore the paper into small pieces and threw them into the grate. Meeting her eyes, he gave a low laugh.

"So that is over," he said.

"Oh, Val, you don't mean——"

"Yes—she has politely, but firmly, ended our engagement. It is only what I have been expecting for a long time. Don't worry yourself, mother—I shall survive this, as I have survived other disappointments!"

"She might have waited a little—to spoil your home-coming was most cruel and selfish; but, you know, Val, I never cared for Gladys!"

"I know, mother; don't let us talk about her any more."

When he came down dressed for dinner, he sent a keen glance round the room, but only his mother was there, seated by the fire with her knitting. Curtains were drawn and lamps lighted, and there was an air of comfort and snugness which appealed to him; he felt it was pleasant to be at home again.

"You seem to have altered things here, mother. I don't know quite what the change is; perhaps it is all these flowers about, and surely the curtains are new, and this is very pretty." He touched the piece of quaint embroidered velvet on the marble mantel, where Venetian glass and Dresden china gave tones of bright color.

"Oh, that's all Francie's doing; she likes arranging flowers for the rooms and pulling the furniture about!" Mrs. Waryng answered, with tranquil satisfaction. As she spoke, Francie herself entered the room. "Ah, here you are, dear; you and Val have already made each other's acquaintance, I hear!"

Val advanced with outstretched hand and a twinkle of his eyes. She gave him a quick, defiant glance, but did not relinquish her hold on the fluffy, white Persian cat she held in her arms.

"Yes—we have met," was all she deigned to reply, and then turned her attention to playing with the cat.

Val felt he was in disgrace, but, as he stood looking down at the bright hair and downcast eyelashes resting on the flushed cheek, he was conscious of no penitence for his transgression.

During dinner the conversation was almost entirely a duologue between the mother and son; Frances Vane refused to be drawn into it, only occasionally vouchsafing a remark when directly spoken to. Mrs. Waryng was far too happy in hearing Val talk to notice anyone else's silence.

When he went to join the ladies in the parlor, after smoking his cigar, he found his mother again alone.

"Francie has some letters to write, so she has gone to her own room; she insisted we would rather have our first evening together," Mrs. Waryng told him, cheerfully.

So this proud maiden meant to ignore him by way of punishment; but, at all events, she had told no tales. His mother, with her old-fashioned ways, might possibly have taken umbrage at his mistake. One of her chief complaints against him in former days had been what she called his "frivolity of conduct" with the young women of the neighborhood—very harmless flirtations he considered them to have been, on looking back.

He began to understand that he would have to make his peace by going down on his knees to Miss Francie Vane. It was strange that the image of his erstwhile ladylove seemed to have been completely blotted from his memory and given place to the picture of a girl with bright brown hair gazing at the setting sun. He became so inattentive to his mother's questionings that, at last, she declared he appeared tired and bade him "Good-night!"—but it was the remembrance of a stolen kiss that was distracting his attention.

The next morning, as he stood by his dressing table, a rush of white wings outside his window and the sound of cooing replies to a sibilant call beneath, attracted his attention. Looking down on the lawn, he saw his mother's ward feeding the pigeons, who clustered around her feet and settled on her shoulders, and even dared impudently to take the grain from the basket she carried on her arm. At a little distance the white cat sat apart, and eyed the group with contemptuous indifference, while a couple of fox terriers rolled and rollicked at the further end of the lawn. It was for such a scene as this that his eyes had ached in the glaring solitudes of his exile—the girl in her simple morning dress, the garden with its mellow autumn tints, the sense of rest and peace; this was home! A feeling of great contentment took possession of him; he hastened to finish his dressing, and to join the party in the garden.

Francie was so absorbed in her business that she did not see him until he was close to her, and he had time to appreciate the freshness of her girlish beauty out there in the sunlight; the expression of her eyes was so innocent and gentle as she caressed her birds that he commenced instantly to beg for her pardon. She listened with head averted until he said he had mistaken her for some one else.

"For some one else!" she repeated, in a startled tone.

"Yes! For a young lady whom I thought I had a right to kiss—though that, as it happens, was another mistake," he added, bitterly.

She looked at him intently, and he felt sure that she knew the other side of the story—the side taken by Gladys, whatever it might be. When he questioned Francie, she admitted that Gladys had told her something—that they were "not suited to each other."

"And that it was my fault?" he interjected.

She did not reply, but throwing the last handful from her basket, turned toward the house. He walked by her side meditating, wondering what her thought about him might be. Could he have read them, he would have discovered some confusion in Francie's mind. The description given by Gladys Harcourt of her dare-devil lover, who had won her consent to an engagement more by the impetuosity of his love-making after a week's acquaintance than by anything else, did not accord quite with the bearded man of grave demeanor and quiet speech walking beside her. Possibly his mother had declared him to have been the handsomest and most attractive boy in the world, who would certainly have been spoiled by her women friends if she had not rescued him by sheer force of will from their too pronounced encouragement.

Francie had imagined a good-looking, conceited young man who took for granted that every girl must be ready to fall in love with him at first sight—an opinion which his method of introducing himself to her seemed to have justified.

Of his good looks there could be no doubt, but the night before, while she had sat listening to him, she discerned in his conversation only a frank and outspoken love for his mother, and a natural exhilaration at finding himself once more at home. She began to think she had judged him hardly; her severity relaxed, and, when they reached the house, they were on excellent terms.

Fate and Mrs. Waryng together conspired to further their intimacy. Val's mother had a neuralgic attack and remained in her room, so to Francie fell the task of entertaining the young man. They breakfasted together, then went round the gardens, stables and paddock. She knew every creature in the barnyard, and they knew her—dogs, cats, horses, not excluding the pigs and the inhabitants of the poultry yard—all came hurrying to greet her at the sound of her voice; she seemed like a fairy princess in her own little world.

They lunched together, and then, at Mrs. Waryng's request, Francie took Val for a drive in her dogcart. He was interested in seeing all his old haunts again, but evinced no desire to pay any calls on former friends.

"There will be plenty of time later to look up the natives—just now I feel a bit off!" he told her, and she understood his words bore some reference to the fickle Gladys.

After dinner he fetched a portfolio of snapshots, to show her the strange places he had visited in his travels. Among them was a photograph of his former fiancee, taken at the time of his departure from home. He took it up and gazed hard at the cold and discontented beauty of the face; then he looked at Francie. How different was her fresh and natural charm from that other—who, although five years his senior, had enchained his boyish heart. He laid the picture aside, and with it went all regret.

The days slipped into weeks, and one afternoon Val found the girl in her favorite seat near the window; she was reading a letter, and he recognized the writing.

"You have heard from Gladys?" he said, as he sat down beside her.

"Yes. She is in a hospital, training to be a nurse," Francie answered.

"She is well—and happy?" he queried.

"She says she is both; that she has at last found her vocation, and never knew before what it was to be content with life."

As he sat silent, looking out of the window, she murmured:

"Are you sorry, Val?" she asked, quietly.

He turned and looked at her.

"Have I seemed as if I were sorry, here with you? You might help me to be very glad!"

Meeting his eyes, she began to understand.

He laid his hand on hers and asked:

"Do you remember our first meeting, Francie? What were you thinking about then, when I found you here?"

"I was thinking—well, I was thinking what you would be like!"

Her eyes drooped—and then he also understood.—New York Weekly.

A Complimentary Captain.

John D. Crimmins, in the New York Times, tells of a party that hired a boat owned by a man at Atlantic City who takes out sailing parties for a consideration. A number of young ladies were of the party.

About a mile and a half out from the Inlet the wind freshened most unexpectedly and there was trouble. For a while it looked as if the dinky little catboat would capsize. The girls were considerably wrought up and gave expression to their fears in no uncertain manner.

"See here, young ladies," said the owner of the craft, just as one of the passengers let out an awful shriek, "you seem to forget that if she goes down I'm the chap that loses most. She's my boat."

Fishy.

Mother (reproachfully, to her small son)—"Jamie, where have you been all afternoon?" Jamie (uneasily)—"At Sunday-school, mamma." Mother—"Then how is it you are wet and smell so of fish?" Jamie (in desperation)—"Well, you see, I've been studying about Jonah, and the whale, and—well—I guess it came off on my clothes."—Harper's Weekly.

THE PULPIT.

AN ELOQUENT SUNDAY SERMON BY BISHOP C. C. McCABE.

Subject: God's Little Ones.

Brooklyn, N. Y.—Bishop C. C. McCabe preached in the Hanson Place M. E. Church Sunday morning. The Rev. Charles E. Locke, the pastor, conducted the service. Bishop McCabe chose for his subject "God's Little Ones," and preached from the text Isaiah lx:22: "And a little one shall become a thousand and a small one a strong nation. I, the Lord, hath said it, in his time." He said:

There are two thoughts that claim our attention as we study this text. One is the kind of workers God chooses to do His greatest work in this world—the little ones; and, second, the possible rapidity with which God's work may go forward in this world. God chooses the lowly to do His great work. The history of the world never yet has been fairly written. We know what the great have done, we know what kings and emperors and generals and philosophers and poets and inventors have done, but the Macauley has not yet arisen to trace out in history what God's little ones have done, yet the history of the world cannot be fairly written without telling the story of their lives, because they have done so much for the world, and what others have done would have been in vain had it not been for what God's little ones have accomplished. He chose the lowly. "God hath respect unto the lowly, but the proud He knoweth afar off." He loves the lowly heart that trusts in Him. What an impediment to Christian work is pride! We cannot build up a strong Christian character without humility. Humility comes from the Latin word "humus," which means "the ground" — the ground on which to build a strong Christian character. Its corner stone and foundation stone must be humility, and if the character lack that grace, it will not stand the test of time and temptation; but, with humility, the Christian character may be built up with a symmetry and universalness that will endure through life and eternity. What do you think of this passage? "I, the high and lofty one that inhabiteth eternity, I will dwell in the high and holy places with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit." God chooses as His associates the humble and the contrite.

Our Lord carried on His work after the same plan. He chose the humble and lowly workers and sent them out to preach His gospel. And one day they came back to Him surprised and delighted with their experience, and they said: "Master, even the devils are subject to us in Thy name," and it is written that at that time Jesus rejoiced in spirit and said: "Father, I thank Thee because Thou hast hidden these things from the wise and prudent and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father, for so it seemeth good in Thy sight." Paul understood this well when he wrote to the Corinthians: "Not may wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise, and God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty, and the base things of the world and things which are despised hath God chosen; yea, and things which are not to bring to naught things that are, that no flesh should glory in His presence." How low He gets it down! That has always been God's plan, even before the time when the babe came to the manger in Bethlehem. Jesus born in Bethlehem in Judea—that little, lowly one was God's answer to the world's cry for help and light. It was a little added weakness to that we had already, poverty added to the poverty we had already; it was an infant's wail added to what Paul calls the "groan of creation." That was God's way of answering man.

I will just call your attention to the possible rapidty with which the kingdom of God can grow in this world, "a little one becoming a thousand." That is a tremendous rate of gain; it seems as if it could not be so. We say Isaiah was a poet; a mystical man and exaggerated sometimes, but this is no exageration. It has often been the case. Yea, a small one has become a nation in the history of the onwird march of the kingdom of Jesus Christ, our Lord. I believe that God wants His kingdom to grow rapidly, and I think that was the spirit of Jesus when He told His disciples the parable of the talents. On another occasion He gave them another parable of the rich man who before going away gave each of his servant a pound and on his return required his own with usury. One man said: "Lord, Thy pound hath gained ten pounds." That was a big percentage of interest. And another said: "Lord, Thy pound hath gained five pounds." That was a good percentage, and Jesus said: "The kingdom of heaven is like that." That is the way invested lives may grow; that is the way life, no matter how humble, may grow; that is consecration. That is the teaching of these two parables.

Now these are commercial figures. Let us take them into the light and try to understand them. In the parable the master speaks of three rates of gain. When the man who had five talents brought five more he was worth 100 per cent. to his master, and he who had two and brought two more was also worth 100 per cent. to his master, but when the man who had only one pound brought five pounds more he was worth 500 per cent. to his master, and the man whose one pound had gained ten pounds was worth 1000 per cent. to his master; and Jesus said: "The kingdom of heaven is like that." All those rates of gain are possible in the kingdom of heaven. We cannot receive it right off. Let us try to comprehend the Master's meaning. Six per cent.—we know all about that—will do wonders if we will only give it a little time.

In 1620 the island of Manhattan was bought by the white man from the Indians for $24, which is an insignificant sum. Yes, but put it out at interest at six per cent. and add interest to interest and let it grow for 285 years and how much would you have then? The $24 would then have increased to $192,400,000, and that is the way the kingdom of heaven ought to grow. And if you keep that money out at interest for 450 years it will be able to buy Manhattan Island with all there is on it, and then there will be enough left to buy every State in the Union, and then there will still be enough left to buy Great Britain. And if left out at interest for 500 years there would be enough to buy the United States, England and Germany. And the Master said: "The kingdom of heaven is like that," and that is the way it ought to grow, and that is the way it would grow if we would simply keep the idea of the power and compound spiritual interest of the church of God. If you kept out the $24 with interest added to interest for 600 years it would wreck the world. Six per cent! That is entirely too small a rate of gain to suit my soul. What does it mean? It means this: That here is the church of 100 members instrumental in the conversion of six souls to Christ in a year. I would not be satisfied with that rate at all. One hundred per cent. is the least rate of gain that any Christian church ought to think worthy of the kingdom of God. The bells of the millennium would be ringing before we ced if we only would keep our soul winning for a few years. It is not difficult to win a soul. I have been trying to work out this problem for years—trying to be worth something for Jesus. One night I arrived at New Haven, Conn., and took a hack at midnight to the house where I was to stay. When the hackman asked for his fare I dropped a quarter into his hand, and, grasping it, said: "Good night, sir! I hope to meet you in glory some day." He jumped on the box, whirled his horse around, and was gone.

I did not expect to see him again. Away after midnight my host knocked at my chamber door and said: "A hackman is here, acting queerly. He says he wants to see you and has got to see you to-night." I said: "Let him come in." I arose and threw a shawl over me, and in came a great stalwart hackman with his whip in his hand and tears running down his cheeks and he said: "If I meet you in glory I have got to turn around, for I am not going that way. I have come to ask you to pray for me. I could not keep away." What a joy it was to pray for that man! He went out comforted by God's holy spirit, and I believe, I was worth 100 per cent. to my Master that night. The possible growth of the kingdom is what I am talking about.

In 1865, when the war was over, I was on a train going from Lancaster, Ohio, and saw a drunken soldier sitting by himself. Nobody would sit by a drunken soldier, but that is the very kind of man I like to sit by. I sat down by him and by and by stole my arm gently around his neck and whispered to him: "Comrade, when are you going to give your heart to Jesus Christ and be a Christian?" He looked embarrassed and got up and went to another part of the train. I thought I had offended him. I went that night to preach in the little town of Putnam, where I once was pastor, and there sat that man and his sister beside him. We had a glorious meeting that night. I did not see him again for thirty-five years, but one night I was about to speak to the Grand Army in the old Dutch Church on Fifth avenue. There were 1800 soldiers there. A splendid looking man came down the aisle and I said to a gentleman: "Who is that man?" and he said: "That is Colonel Hadley, the head of the St. Bartholomew Mission. He has been instrumental in planting fifty-four rescue missions in this country." I went down, and said: "Brother Hadley, I am glad to see you. I have heard about your work, but I never saw you before." "Oh, yes you have," he replied. "Thirty-five years ago I was sitting on a train and you came and sat down by me and wanted to know when I was going to be a Christian and give my heart to God. I never got over that question. You have seen me before." I believe it is possible for every Christian to gain over 100 per cent. for our blessed Lord every year.

There are souls that are worth a thousand per cent. There was that noble woman in the Epworth Rectory with her nineteen children. Do you know she adopted five orphans besides—twenty-four altogether—and her husband was a preacher. (Laughter). Surely the invested life of Susanna Wesley was worth more than 1000 per cent.

The bishop then reviewed at some length the progress of Methodism since the first conference in 1773, particularly in Ohio. He then spoke of the work in Russia, where there are now 2,000,000 converts, and liberty to worship according to conscience, and then said:

There will come a time when God Himself will get in a hurry and when He will say, "The earth has wept long enough. There has been enough war, enough trouble," and when He will hasten on the kingdom and bring it quickly. I think He will hasten when we hasten. Oh, brothers, let us hurry with the gospel!

After an urgent appeal for increased subscriptions to missionary work, Bishop McCabe concluded his sermon as follows:

Brothers, your children will see this world converted. In a great meeting the other day we sent this message to Theodore Roosevelt: "We are looking to you to bring about a movement for universal arbitration." I find twenty-one nations have asked him to take the initiative, and your children will live to see the day when war will be no more, and when that happens we, who have believed it all the time, will say, "I told you so." There are two kinds of faith, one that believes before a thing happens, and the other after. What kind have you? I thank God I believe it now before it happens. I believe the whole earth is going to be converted. The time is coming when no man will have to say to his neighbor, "Know the Lord." And the time is coming when "the glory of the Lord shall fill the earth as the waters cover the sea." May He hasten it in His time.

All Right.

The difference between receiving the Spirit and being filled with the Spirit is a difference not of a kind, but of a degree. In one case the [illegible] of Heaven has reached the dat[illegible]ber, disturbing night, but le[illegible] some deep shadows. In the other [illegible]t light has filled the whole chambe[illegible]nd made every corner light.—William Arthur.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR DECEMBER 24.

Subject: The Character of the Messiah, Isa. ix., 1-7.—Golden Text, Matt. i., 21.—Memory Verses, 6, 7.—Commentary on the Day's Lesson.

I. Great darkness (vs. 1,2). 1. "Nevertheless." A transition word from the dark picture of chapter 8:5-22, describing the woes from Assyrian predominance to the bright dawn and consummation of the Messianic era. "Shall not be such." The darkness shall not be as great as it has been. There was a ray of encouragement for those who were ready to receive the prophet's words. "Zebulun." Galilee was the land that principally suffered in the first Assyrian invasion.

2. "The people.....in darkness." The people of Judah. They were at this time under a two-fold darkness. 1. The darkness of outward trouble. See 2 Kings 15:37; 16:4-8, 17; 2 Chron. 28:5-8. 2. They were in moral darkness. Ahaz had led the people into the most abominable practices in honor of the heathen divinities. Finally, toward the close of the reign, he shut up the great doors of the temple (2 Chron. 28:24), discontinued the offering of incense and the morning and evening sacrifice, and left the whole interior to decay, neglect and ruin.

II. A great light (vs. 2-5). 2. "A great light." The sudden change from dense darkness to the shining light which the prophet saw is quite remarkable. What light was this? The promise of redemption; the prospect of the coming of Immanuel.

3. "Hast multiplied the nation." Isaiah with prophetic eye pierces the centuries and sees the hosts that would come under the reign of the Messiah and be numbered with the true spiritual Israel. "And not increased." See R. V. for correct rendering. "They joy before Thee." The prophet notes it to be a religious joy because it is said to be before God—that is, in His presence and with a grateful acknowledgment of His benefits.

4. "Thou hast broken the yoke." The Jews were successively delivered from the burdensome and galling yoke of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians and Macedonians, but these deliverances were only a shadow of redemption from the yoke of Satan, and that redemption seems here especially predicted as if already accomplished. "As in the day of Midian." As Gideon with a handful of men conquered the hosts of Midian, so Messiah, the "child" (v. 6), shall prove to be the "Prince of Peace," and the small company under Him shall overcome the mighty hosts of Antichrist. See the same contrast in Micah 5:2-5.

5. "For every battle." It was the custom of antiquity to pile the arms of prostrate enemies, the spoils of less value, and their spotted garments, into a heap and then burn them. All that belongs to war shall be swept away; the war itself shall die. The Messiah abolishes all war, but not until His foes are either swept away by His judgments or melted into penitence and won over by His love.

III. A vision of the Messiah (v. 6). 6. "Unto us." The prophet spake of the predicted blessings as if already communicated. "A Son is given." God's gratuitous gift, upon which man had no claim (John 3:16). A gift of love, of joy, of universal fitness to our needs. As Son of man Jesus was "a child born," as Son of God He was a "Son given." "Government." The ensign of government, the sceptre, the sword, or key, was borne upon or hung from the shoulder. All government shall be vested in Him. "His name." A name stands for all that the man is and has—his character, his principles and his property. "Wonderful." Because His nature was both human and divine. Whoever refuses to believe in the supernatural must pause at the manger. He can go no farther. How Godhood and manhood could be knit together in the person of Christ is beyond us. But things incomprehensible are not incredible. All divine works are wonderful. There are marvels enough in a drop of water to bewilder the wisest. "Counselor." One who has wisdom to guide himself and others. Jesus was the embodiment of the wisdom of God. He was a Saviour, both God and man, a personal revelation of God's love, a perfect character and example. He is our Counselor, never guiding us astray, but always by the best ways to the best ends. "Mighty God." God the mighty One. As He has wisdom, so He has strength; He is able to save to the uttermost, and such is the work of the Mediator that no less a power than that of the mighty God could accomplish it. "Everlasting Father." Expressing the divine love and pity for men, a love that can never fail for it is everlasting. "Prince of peace." As a king He preserves, commands, creates peace. His peace both keeps the hearts of His people and rules in them.

IV. The Messianic kingdom (v. 7). 7. "Of the increase," etc. The government shall increase in numbers, in power, in the completeness of its rule. It shall increase in the blessings it bestows. It is like the powers of nature, which are exhaustless. There is no limit to their application to the uses of man. With all our marvelous inventions and discoveries of what nature can do, we have yet gathered but a few rays from the world of light, a few sprays from the ocean of blessings. God has in store for man. "Throne of David." To sit upon the throne of David means to reign over the true people of God, and in this sense Christ sat on David's throne. "To order it." To rule it. "From henceforth even for ever." Only such a kingdom can endure. Nothing is really settled till it is settled right. The powers of evil seem very strong, but every one is doomed to fall before Christ.

OUR COUNTY BUILDINGS.

We notice with pleasure the improvements that are being made to our county buildings. The addition to the court house is about a story high, consisting of one grand jury room, two office rooms and a toilet room on the first floor; also with a side entrance to new extension and a hall to extend through entire building. On the second floor there is to be two jury rooms, one judge's room and a toilet room, giving ample room for all of our county officers. Leaving in front on second floor, one consultation room and one ladies' waiting room, a room that is often neglected or overlooked. The judge's stand and bar has raised so that every one in the court room can see the judge or speaker. The building so far in color and workmanship harmonize beautifully with present building. The jail is to have a second story. The brick work is now complete and is of good design. The brick work is to be stuccoed so as to resemble stone. All windows have steel window guards. The roof is beautifully designed, to be covered with slate. The second floor is made of heavy steel No. 1 beams and corrugated steel arches with concrete floors, the finish being so put on as to [illegible] to one corner of [illegible] drain pipe to [illegible] sheriff to [illegible] of the cell [illegible] we will be one bath room for prisoners, one juvenile cell for boys and one main cell room for four cells with seven large windows to give light and ventilation, they being on second floor and connected with water works, making the sanitary sewer system perfect. With a new steel stairway from loggia to second floor makes it an up-to-date jail building. On looking over the old cells we see that they are of old style soft steel, lattice work, a great portion of it entirely rusted out and badly broken, and is of soft iron, having been put in some thirty years ago. Prisoners have sawed out of it at different times. We hope our commissioners will not stop the good work until they have put in a new and up-to-date cell work with all modern protection for sheriff and safety for the prisoners. Accused men, as our judge declared in giving his charge to the grand jury, are not put in jail for punishment, but for safe keeping only. And they should be well cared for until they get a fair trial. We doubt if there is a jail in this state that is as poorly equipped with cell work as ours. This addition would make our jail as good as any jail in the state.

STOCK LAW.

Judge L. H. Reynolds tells us that he has had so many inquiries about the manner necessary to proceed in order to get a vote on stock law that he will put in our next issue a statement showing the steps prescribed by law.

ABOUT CANDIDATES.

All letters praising any particular candidate by name will have to be paid for at the rate of 1-2 cent per word. The UNION will publish free all matter relating to the general welfare and prospects of the party of the People. tf

Clanton, Ala., Dec. 28, 1905.

Mr. Editor:

Say, wasn't our last court a stunner? Didn't we blind tiger folks catch it? I tell you it looks squally for us that live on the outside of Clanton, and I believe we will have to move in town, for you known no one is ever bothered for selling whisky in Clanton, for you see we are too handy, and if some folks get unruly we can pass the jug around and that will hide a multitude of whisky selling here. Back to the last court, didn't Messrs. Smith and Middleton get hit hard for not being there about ten minutes? Six cases went off the docket, but of course it wasn't done on account of their politics. I know the bar here is too honorable to take such advantage of a lawyer on account of his politics, but you know some folks look at that transaction mighty suspicious and say that it was because of their politics that such hard orders were asked for by the lawyers here; but I suspect that it might have been because they had more than their share of cases, for after six were thrown out they had more left than the others. But those six cases will come up at the next term of court. If the bar here is to jump on Smith and Middleton on account of their politics, we country folks will have to stand up to their back and give them our business; and if the Democrats are going to make politics an issue in everything, here's at you; we folks can have some politics ourselves. I've heard that certain sentences were asked to be reduced on account of the criminal being a Democrat. I didn't hear this myself, but I hear it talked around. My goodness, think of what we are coming to when the leading Democrats of our county argue in justification of crime that the one committing it was a Democrat. Good Lord, has it come to this in Chilton, that criminals ought to be turned loose because they are Democrats? But you know Democrats are curious folks, especially those that live in Chilton county. I don't quite believe that they would try to keep us Republicans out of heaven, but I do think if (by chance) any of them got there first, they would try to make us take a back seat. But it is a great consolation to me to believe (as I do) that we Republicans will have as big a majority there as Roosevelt had last year. Speak of the Democrats wanting to lead, it does look as if they want to make Judge Reynolds the tail end of the county Sunday school convention in spite of all he can do, for I notice when they put him on the program it is always about a day after it adjourns. I do hope that the cotton association will not let politics get control of it, and so try to keep us Republicans from getting a good price for our cotton. If there is any distinction made we Republicans should get the highest price, and the Democrats ought to get about 4 cents, as that is what they vote for in supporting their party. But since Roosevelt came through here and the Democrats tried to get into his lap, I don't reckon that they'll vote any more for 4-cent cotton. Just listen to the roll call: Judge Honeycutt? Here. Lee Hayes? Here. Judge Adams? Gone. A. C. Smith? Here. W. L. McDowell? Here. W. A. Mims? Gone. J. O. Middleton? Here. J. J. Thompson? Here. R. A. Rasco? Does not answer. Yes, we have all recanted and are now with the people. We'll scour the interior of our county and bring the remnant of our enemie before our people at the election next year. Now, brothers, pay your poll tax. You can't vote next year for anything (or against it) unless you pay your poll tax by February 1, 1906. We have an election already called to vote on a special school tax on February 6, and we are sure going to have a vote on stock law, and then the general election comes off next November, and we are going to elect a Sheriff. Pay your poll tax now.

JUST A VOTER.

LOMAX.

Mr. Editor:

Here I come again after a long silence. Am glad to say health of community is good. Mrs. R. M. Jackson is visiting friends and relatives in Chambers county this week. F. E. Hannibal and family visited Thorsby Sunday. The new proprietor of the saw mill is doing a good business here. We hear that our County Board of Education has passed a rule that our teachers must not allow any tobacco to be used at school or on the school grounds. Some patrons think their children should have the privilege of taking a little at play time when out of the house, as they have allowed their children to contract the habit, and know by experience what a punishment it is to go without tobacco all day. We hope teachers will act wisely in this matter. We know they should teach against all wrongs. Let us all strive to improve our "talents," and keep sober during Christmas, and be thankful for our blessings in the year 1905. Look toward the year 1906 with a determination to live in a way that our Creator will approve, and so keep a clear conscience. Success to the Union and its numerous readers.

"OBSERVER."

THORSBY.

The marriage of Mr. James C. Killibrew to Mrs. Annie Smith Lane took place at the home of the bride's brother, Mr. P. C. Smith, on Thursday, the 14th. Rev. Williams, of Montevallo, performed the ceremony which was witnessed by friends from Jemison, Clanton and Thorsby. The bride and groom left for Byron, Ga., on the evening train, where the latter has a large peach orchard. May happiness and joy be theirs through all time to come. The friends of Mrs. Prestholt will be glad to learn that she is recovering from her serious operation and that she will soon be able to return home. Rev. Beal, of Howard college, was in Thorsby the greater part of last week and delivered many eloquent sermons to a well filled church. Miss Ellen Forsman, of Birmingham, was a visitor here last week. Miss Elfreda Turnquist and Mr. James Bosworth were married in Birmingham at 8 p. m. on Monday, the 18th. Mr. Guy Gerald and Miss Ellen Forsman acted as best man and bridesmaid. Both bride and groom have large circles of friends in Thorsby, who wish them a long and happy life. The Sunshine Society met with Mrs. L. Reagan on Tuesday. The Ladies' Aid Society met with Mrs. Stabler on the 19th. Mr. Hannibal, living south of town, lost a fine horse last week. Mr. and Mrs. Tornblom left for Chicago on Wednesday. We hope to see them back in Thorsby at some future date. A merry Christmas to all who read THE UNION.

NEMO.

RANDOLPH.

Everybody in a rush for Christmas.

Ward's new store is going up. Ellis Scott, one of the merchants of Ashby was in town Monday. Before we address the Union's readers again Christmas, marking one of the grandest events of earth's history, will have come and gone. This great event was heralded by angels—the birth of the world's Redeemer. The angel pronounced it good tidings of great joy that should be to all people—yes, not one nation only, but all of Adam's race. This Redeemer was to save His people from their sins, deliver from the bondage of sin, give to humanity a resurrection from the dead. Stupendous thought. Oh, what a manifestation of the Creator's love. Then let the Union's readers all joyfully celebrate the Christmas time, not by a drunken carousal or undue hilarity. Let all the Union's readers avoid strong drink, and they will be better prepared to appreciate the return of another Christmas. Just think how many lives will be snuffed out before the new year. Some in a drunken brawl; others by accident and otherwise. So let us all be wise and avoid the dangerous cup. But we hope all will have a plesant Christmas and share the feelings of the poet—

"Watchman, tell us of the night,
For the morning seems to dawn.
Traveler, darkness takes its flight,
Doubt and terror are withdrawn.

"Watchman, let thy wanderings cease,
Hie thee to thy quiet home.
Traveler, lo! the Prince of peace,
Lo! the Son of God is come."

Abundant success to the Union and its editor. We now bid you all adieu for 1905. "ONE OF THE BOYS."

A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

We are much delighted to say that Christmas time is almost here again, and we yet alive, with opportunity to live better if we will try. I think that we all should celebrate Christmas as a birthday of our Saviour either in church service or singing with prayerful hearts, rejoicing in hope and playing sacred tunes on some instrument in the way of honoring our Lord, while we rejoice and thank God for his many past blessings bestowed upon us thro the past year. He has spared our lives through another long twelve months for some purpose. Then if we love the Lord we desire to try to honor Him and please Him in every way that we can. Then how can we please Him? By living right. It is not right for us to spend Christmas in running rough jokes, dancing, drinking, making egg-nogs, visiting those foolish things they call play parties. Such never did please God. And really people cannot celebrate Christmas as a birthday of Jesus Christ while they spend the whole week in wicked habits. When we are pleasing Satan we are not celebrating the birthday of our Lord as we should. No one can serve God and mammon. They will love one and hate the other, for no one can serve two masters. Then if we will celebrate Christmas week to the glory and honor of God, we will be able to meet the new year feeling light and happy, because we will realize we have laid up a few more treasures in heaven, where moth nor rust doth corrupt. Though wicked pleasures do not bring us anything but trouble or disgrace and carry always steps on the road to everlasting woe and misery, even those friends who you are trying to entertain by wicked habits are nothing in your favor at all. They can't save you from death nor carry you to heaven. No, no; perhaps they will not even cheer you while you are in the struggles of death. Though a Christian's life is a happy life and Christian enjoyments are nice—nice enough to entertain anybody. I close by wishing everybody a bright Christmas, happy New Year.

MRS. S. J. M'DANIEL.

MAPLESVILLE.

Mrs. Johnson, of Texas, has been visiting here and met many friends who knew her at the time she lived here. Miss Powers, of Jackson, has been with her sister, Mrs. Gilbert, for several weeks. The latter has a VERY YOUNG man at her home now, who can stay there for 21 years if he so desires. Miss Pearl King, of New York, who has been touring the south the past few weeks, delighted her aunt, Mrs. M. E. Glover, with a visit. The many friends she had made here on a former visit enjoyed her society. Miss King spent the past summer in Europe, of which she spoke most interestingly. She is now in Birmingham on a visit to relatives there before returning to New York. We are pleased to notice that sweet little Algia DuBose has recovered from her illness and is able to take her horseback rides again. Prof. Comer, of Riderville, has taught a most successful class in music at the Methodist church, and his friends are all eager for him to have another class soon. We know of nothing so refining as store. Miss Macie Adams has lately visited friends at Pletcher. Many thanks are given those patriotic young men, Cleve Holdritch and Garner Henson, for the bridge they built over Byrd's Creek, a necessity pedestrians have felt the need of. Claude Culver's neighbors regret that he has moved his family to the old home at Stanton. Old friends of Wiley King were saddened by his interment here by the side of other members of his family. His daughter, Mrs. Rainey, and his son-in-law, Wiley Hernandez, accompanied the remains from Birmingham. Since court is over men folks have settled down to business again. Our colored prophets, who we find to be much more reliable than the "almanac man," predict much rough weather the rest of this year. Ned Smitherman has lately visited relatives and friends here. Rev. Sturdevant, of Birmingham, was delayed here by his train and made many friends in that time. Mr. McGuire, father of Mrs. Claughton, is visiting here. Some are taking "time by the forelock" and gathering holly and smilax for Christmas decoration. Mrs. Williams is convalescing from a serious illness. The good law-abiding citizens of Maplesville and vicinity have employed Deputy Sheriff Lee Hayes to stay at Maplesville about ten days to keep peace during the holiday time. We sincerely hope the presence of this good officer will prevent any disorderly conduct. This is much better than enforcing the law AFTER the offense "against the peace and dignity of the state."

We sincerely wish "ye editor" a "Merrie Christmas" and that all your patrons will get something pretty in their stockings that "Dear old Santa Claus" will put there.

SARDIS ITEMS.

Editor Union:

Please allow me space in our paper, the people's paper, THE UNION, to say a few words through its columns. The people in this neighborhood seem to be on smooth sailing waters, politically and otherwise. Two of our neighbors had a ruffle, but Mr. Lee Hayes happened along in time to get the matter adjusted serenely. Mr. Hayes is a man that is always for peace. To demonstrate that fact, the T. T. Lumber Co., of Maplesville, has employed him at a good salary to stay and look after their interests at Maplesville during the Christmas holidays. This shows that people have confidence in Mr. Hayes, and as he is going to be a candidate for our next sheriff, we can not do better than to elect him. He has been well tried and we know that he is always ready to perform his duty. He has no opposition in these parts and is sure to be elected so far as beat 7 is concerned. Best wishes to UNION and its readers.

S. B. M'CARY.

The Pessimist

Behold the soured pessimist,
With frown he goes around;
He never sees the smiling sun,
He gazes on the ground;
The only skies his eyes are great
Are in the puddles at his feet.

Though flowers bloom along the way
Their grace he never heeds,
He searches out with acid eye
The rank, forbidding weeds;
The dainty rose he spurns and scorns
And only finds the bitter thorns.
He never hears the ringing laugh,
But listens for the sighs;
His always wears a veil of mist
Before his gloomy eyes;
The way he goes is full of gloom,
He's always looking to the tomb.

Behold the gloomy pessimist,
He's gladdest when he's sad,
And if you give these words a twist
He's saddest when he's glad.

ROUGH DIAMONDS

BY F. R. MILLS

(Copyright, 1905, by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

The only animate object in sight on the vast wilderness of flatness to the east was a prairie schooner drawn by a pair of lean, straggling horses which was making its way towards the haven ahead.

The weary horses, under the double inspiration of the whip in the hands of the unkempt man on the seat and the suggestion that the trees ahead offered, increased their tired walk to a poor imitation of a trot, which was finally effected in landing them at the foot of the slope while old Sol was yet quite a distance from the western horizon.

As the outfit came to a standstill the other occupants of the schooner made themselves manifest. A young woman with an infant in her arms descended the rear steps, and while her husband unhitched and unharnessed the horses, improvised a bed from a miscellaneous collection of clothes, deposited the baby thereon and proceeded to bring from the interior of the wagon the things necessary for the preparation of the evening meal.

"Nell," exclaimed the man suddenly, "we're goin' to win out one of these days, see if we don't."

The wife laughed happily. "I think we've won out now, Jim. Who in all the world has a boy like this?"

"Oh, the kid's all there, you bet, but you know, Nell, you ain't used to this sort of life and it's goin' to stop soon now, I can tell you."

"There, there, Jim, don't talk like that. Everything's all right as long as I have you and baby. Now, sir, as a punishment for being so gloomy, you can take that pail and go and look for some fresh water."

He obediently took the pail and started off in the direction of the woods, whistling a merry tune.

He had not penetrated into them very far before unmistakable signs of water began to show themselves. As he proceeded the underbrush and trees began to assume a healthier look and here and there small patches of moss made their appearance, and finally there was borne to his ears that low sweet sound so dear to every plainsman's heart—the trickle of a running stream.

He dropped on his hands and knees by the side of the brook and sampled the water. The quality suggested springs, so he decided to walk up stream in the hope of finding one of these treasures of the plains.

With this end in view he arose from his knees and had stooped over to pick up the pail when the sharp command—

"Throw up your hands, Jim Williams!" drove the blood back to his heart with a rush. However, he had been brought up in the west and knew what would immediately follow if the command was not promptly obeyed, so the same moment that brought him to his feet brought his hands above his head in which position he waited stoically for further developments.

He had not long to wait.

"I see you've had the right kind of trainin', pal," said the same voice. "Come on, boys," it continued. "We'll git through with this job quick."

In obedience to his orders a half dozen men, mostly cowboys, appeared from behind various hiding places and surrounded Williams.

"Throw up your hands, Jim Williams!"

The leader, handing his rifle to one of the others, produced a lariet and approaching the man in the center of [illegible] he asked.

[illegible] sh... [illegible] goin' to be [illegible] cf th... [illegible] there, [illegible] re w... [illegible] goin' to be [illegible] foller

"My God, men," cried the desperate man, "what's become of Nell and the kid if you string me up? I'm all they've got. Let me go and see them first. Give me five minutes, will you, boys?" he pleaded. "You can hide at the edge of the woods and plug me if I make a break."

A silence followed this request which was finally broken by Hank.

"Wal," said he slowly, "I reckon our time ain't so terrible precious but what we can give you five minutes of it. What do you say, boys?" Hank had a wife and children at home.

With bursting heart he held them close a moment.

The "boys" were evidently not in favor of extending this clemency to Williams, but the silence with which they received the question was due partly to the fact that, in that section of the country, it was considered unlucky to oppose the questioner's wishes.

Hank, acting on the principle that silence means acquiescence, gruffly ordered Williams to lead the way to the camp.

Arriving at the edge of the prairie, the crowd halted and, after being eloquently advised as to what would happen if he should be so foolish as to attempt any tricks, the condemned man was allowed to proceed alone towards the wagon.

Nell was sitting on the ground before the fire with baby in her arms, rocking back and forth and singing a soft lullaby. She looked up as Williams approached and putting her fingers to her lips, enjoined silence.

Williams bent over her and held out his arms for the baby, and for the first time Nell noticed the absence of the pail. The discovery surprised her into speech.

"Why, Jim, where is the water?"

"Why I—I dropped the pail in the crick and come back to git something to fish it out with," he stammered, "an' I'd jest like to hold the kid a minit before I go back."

The "kid" had opened his eyes during this dialogue and as there was no more need for quiet, Nell arose with a merry laugh and gave the baby to its father.

Williams held the infant with one arm against his breast and extended the other to Nell. She obediently sidled up to him and with bursting heart he held them close a moment.

The hoot of an owl warned him that his time was up, so pushing Nell away almost roughly, he placed the baby in her arms and started off in the direction from which the sound had come.

Arrived at the edge of the woods, he turned for a last look at the ones who held everything dear to him in life. Nell was standing on the same spot where he had left her and as he turned she raised the baby on high in her strong young arms. Williams waved his hand in reply, then turned his back to the pair and plunged doggedly into the woods, where the men were waiting for him.

"Now," he growled, "go ahead with your hangin'."

Hank led the way and the rest followed silently. Arriving at the place where Williams had been surprised they halted. There was an awkward silence for a moment which was broken by Williams.

"You'll see that Nell gits to civilization, won't you, Hank?" he asked wearily. "Nell didn't know I stole the hoss. I intended to pay you for it sometime," he added.

Still the awkward silence continued. The rest of the men were all looking at Hank and shifting uneasily fr... one foot to the other.

"I ... gentleman, very red in the face, after noisily clearing his throat, finally spoke:

"By all the rules of justice, Mr. Williams," he began, impressively, "your body had orter be danglin' from that there limb over there, but after due and keerful deliberation on the part of these gentlemen here," indicating the others with a wave of his hand, "and myself, we have come to the conclusion that justice must take a back seat in this particular case, so, accordingly there ain't goin' to be no hangin' party here this afternoon. You kin pay me fer that durned hoss when you git good and ready."

Williams stood like a man in a dream for a moment after Hank had finished speaking and then the full realization of all that his words implied came to him in overwhelming force, and despite his will power his emotions mastered him and great sobs shook his frame.

The unusual sight of a man in this condition acted like a spur on the others, and they turned hastily and started towards the spot where they had tied their horses. Hank swearing savagely for no apparent reason.

Williams stood where they had left him until the last man had disappeared from view over the top of the ledge. Then slowly stooping he picked up the pail, filled it from the brook and went back to Nell and the "kid."

Method in His Madness.

He had called at a house in the suburbs on business, and as he rose to go he said:

"I believe you were in the Lake district last summer?"

"Yes."

"Go fishing?"

"Yes."

"Catch anything?"

"One little perch."

"Ha, ha, ha! That's what I expected. Well, good-night."

When the caller had gone the wife said, indignantly:

"Richard, how can you sit there and tell stories in that bold way? You know we caught over twenty fish weighing five pounds apiece; and that big jack weighed eleven pounds."

"My dear wife," returned the husband, soothingly, "you don't know human nature. That man is now willing to take my word for $1,000. If I had told him of those fish he would have gone away believing me to be the biggest fibber in the country."—Exchange.

Bound to Be in the Procession.

About fifty years ago there lived in Barkersville, one of the suburbs of Bangor, Maine, a man by the name of Seth Rogers, a well-to-do farmer, who owned several fine horses. He had one spare horse that he used to let out to his neighbors to help them with their plowing, harvesting, etc. He would always admonish them to be careful of the horse and not work him too hard.

One morning Joe Clark applied to Rogers for the use of his horse for a part of the day.

"Yes, you can have him," said Rogers, "but it is going to be a pretty warm day, so be sure and not drive him too fast."

"I am going over to Veazie to attend a funeral," replied Joe, "and I'm bound to keep up with the procession if it kills the horse."

Dreaming and Doing.

"Those who dream do not do. Those who do have no time to dream."

These epigrams from a recent article by Sarah Bernhardt apply not only to the art students, for whom she wrote it, but with equal aptness to the woman ordering a home or the business girl earning her livelihood out of the home.

"It seems to me," she continues, "that the successful ones are those who never think at all about success, but simply work. They love art, and they toil. They make no speeches, never seek to impress others with the certainty of their own success; never, in fact, bother their heads about others or the opinion of others at any time. They work patiently, they work year after year; their work improves little by little, and they wake some day surprised to find themselves successful."

Labor's Dawn.

The toiler's day begins to dawn,
Its golden morn comes gently on;
Yon mountain rises from the night
With helmet gilded with its light.

There high appears the morning's glow,
While black extends the night below,
Where prowl the creatures of the dark,
Where still is heard the watchdog's bark.

The light that tips yon mountain's crest
Portends the age of darkness past;
That gloomy night shall lose its sway;
The world of toil shall have its day.

The clouds that clothe the mountain's side
Begin to fall apart, divide;
The day shall follow break of dawn
And labor come unto its own.

Shall peace not usher in the day;
On cloud and crag shall lightning play;
Shall thunder's voice the vale awake
And wild the storm in fury break.

Shall rather reason's ray serene
With soft effulgence light the scene,
A world where love and labor reign,
With peace on earth, good will to man.

Her Sugar Weighed By His Soap.

In the little town of Peru, ten miles from Pittsfield, Mass., the farmers in the winter bring their butter and eggs to Frank Creamer's and exchange them for tea, sugar or anything else they need.

One day Mrs. Ackert brought some butter in pound lumps to exchange, and after weighing them, he said, "Mrs. Ackert, this butter does not weigh a pound."

"I can't help that," she said, "I weighed it by a pound of soap I got here a few days ago."

Millions of Cigars.

Key West sent to the North the first six months of this year about 15,000,000 cigars; Porto Rico threw into the United States during the same period about 40,000,000 cigars, while there came from Cuba during that time 25,000,000 cigars.

FLATTERY WORTH THE MONEY.

Colored Mammy's Enthusiasm Had a Commercial Value.

The young man, dressed in his best, was walking along looking pretty well satisfied with himself. Standing near a telegraph pole was an old negro woman. As he approached her she accosted him.

"Why, Mistah Tom," she said. "Good mawin' to yoh." The young man stopped.

"Hello, Aunt Nancy," he said.

"Why, Mistah Tom," the old negress went on, "yoh is sutinly de pixcher uf prettiness. Yoh lookin' swell dis mawnin'. Mah goodness, yoh's de nices' lookin' young man Ah's seed in a month."

The young man was pleased. "Thank you, Aunt Nancy," he said, straightening up a little, "I'm afraid, though, that you're a flatterer."

"No, sah, Ah isn't, Mistah Tom. Yoh suahly look delightful. Ah's mighty proud ter know you. You's de essence uf swellness."

The young man smiled and began to move away.

"Say, Mistah Tom," she called after him. He stopped. She hesitated.

"What is it?" he asked.

"Well, sah," came from the old negress, "yoh sutinly is lookin' fine an' Ah was jist thinkin' dat es good lookin' young man es yoh 'ud be ghty glad ter loan a poah ole nigah woman er quahtah."—Kansas City Times.

No Chloride of Lime for Him.

Pat Egan, a plasterer, and a well known character of Cambridge, Mass., walked into a shoe store on Massachusetts avenue on Saturday evening recently to purchase a pair of shoes, says a writer in the Boston Herald. After looking over three or four pairs of shoes he hit upon one pair that took his fancy. He tried them on, and found that they did not pinch or chafe, but complained that they went on too hard.

"Oh, that'll be all right, Mr. Egan; I'll easily fix that," remarked the clerk, who immediately took the shoes off and proceeded to sprinkle powder into them.

He was about to try them on Pat again, when the latter stood wrathfully up in his stocking feet and shouted out:

"Oh, no, you don't! No, you don't! Mr. Bell! Mr. Bell! Come here! Come here! I've bought shoes of you for the lost foive years, but the divil a shoe will I buy of you again. This brazen-faced clerk of yours tried to put chloride of lime in my shoes, but I was too smart for him."

Why Mother Is Proud.

Look in his face, look in his eyes,
Rougish and blue and terribly wise—
Rougish and blue, but quickest to see
When mother comes in as tired as can be;
Quickest to find her the nicest old chair;
Quickest to get to the top of the stair;
Quickest to see that a kiss on her cheek
Would help her far more than to clatter, to speak.
Look in his face, and guess, if you can,
Why mother is proud of her little man.

The mother is proud—I will tell you this;
You can see it for yourself in her tender kiss.
But why? Well, of all her dears,
There is scarcely one who ever hears
The moment she speaks, and jumps to see
What her want or her wishes may be,
Scarcely one. They all forget,
Or are not in the notion to go quite yet.
But this she knows, if her boy is near.
There is somebody certain to want to hear.

Mother is proud, and she holds him fast.
And kisses him first and kisses him last;
And he holds her hand and looks in her face.
And hunts for her spool which is out of place.
And proves that he loves her whenever he can—
That is why she is proud of her little man.

How Sam Acquired the Watch.

Sam Grove, porter some years ago at the Wilson house, Boston, and known by all the traveling men of the state, and who stuttered very badly, was arrested, charged with stealing a watch. It seems that Sam and a guest of the house played poker and Sam won all of his money; then he put up his watch against a certain amount of money and Sam won the watch. The next day the man had Sam arrested, charged with stealing his watch.

At the trial the judge asked Sam if he had stolen the watch. Sam said "N-no." The judge asked him how he came by the watch, and Sam said: "T-t-the d-d——d f-f-fool b-b-bet on a p-p-pair of q-q-queens."

Similar Symptoms.

"Well, suzz, Ezry!" ejaculated a certain citizen of Pruntytown, upon meeting an acquaintance. "You are lookin' real smilin' and satisfied this afternoon. Betcha it's a boy or girl—hey."

"Betcha 'tain't!" was the reply. "I've just swapped a balky horse to Deacon Pettifer for an animal that ain't got a thing in the world the matter with him except a spavin, the heaves and a stringhalt. That's what tickles me so."—Tom Watson's Magazine.

Higher Education.

Two sisters were sitt'r z in a hotel writing-room. They audibly were discussing their friends.

"Yes, I've just written aunty about Mrs. Blank. I told her that of all the unrefined, uneducated, illiterate people I ever saw"—

"By the way, Emma, how do you spell illiterate?"

Do Cow Peas Make Hens Lay?

A poultry raiser tells the Advance man that he has discovered that cow peas make hens lay. Last winter he left an acre of the peas uncut and his hens ate them. He was surprised to receive double the number of eggs during the winter.—Higginsville Advance.

PLUCKED FROM THE GRAVE

William Maxwell, correspondent of the London Standard in Manchuria, writes: "We were riding over a hill near the Shaho. The dead lay upon the slope like livid stains on a green carpet. In the trench—a deep scar across the brow of the hill—was a tangled web of crimson and purple and gray, rent asunder by black hands and ashen faces. Three days before I saw the tidal wave of war sweep over this hill of horrors. Strenuous days followed laborious nights, when wounded died and living fought. How could anything in that trench be alive! It was an open grave heaped with dead. 'I saw his leg move,' protested my interpreter. Prone on his back lay a Russian soldier, his eyes looked into mine. Pillowed on a corpse, his couch was of dead men. In a second we were off our horses and in the trench. His beard was covered with clay that was dyed a dark crimson; his open mouth was filled with earth, baked hard by the sun. Surely he must be dead. The eyes sought mine and followed me.

"With hasty fingers I probed the clay and found where the bullet had struck. It must have penetrated the brain. Still the eyes followed me I probed again. This bullet had merely grazed the scalp. It was a case of concussion. We took a great coat from a dead comrade at his side and dragged it under him. Yielding to threats, a Chinese servant got into the trench to help us. As we raised the living from the dead the stiffened limbs relaxed and the leg moved. With a cry of horror the Chinaman leapt out of the trench and fled screaming down the hill.

"We lifted our burden out of the noisome pit and laid him on the ground; we broke the earthen gag, cleaned his mouth and gave him drops of whisky and water. From his wounded head we scraped the crimson clay and saw that it might yet be well with him. And all the time his eyes sought mine. Capt. Okada rode to a cottage at the foot of the hill and brought back some Chinamen. They placed the soldier on a door and bore him away.

"Three days later we entered a house filled with wounded—Russian and Japanese. A wan face smiled upon us, two bright eyes welcomed us. It was our wounded soldier. He could not speak, but he nudged a comrade and pointed to the men who had plucked him out of the grave.

IN ENGLAND'S WOODEN WALLS

Of the "wooden walls of England," the great sailing ships in which Admiral Nelson won his victories, and of the men who worked them, a critic writes: "Though beautiful to behold and terrible to fight with, these old men-of-war were more often than not abodes of tyranny and wretchedness. The violence of the press gangs, which seized men of all ages and occupations, was but a prelude to the oppression that followed. Decent men were herded indiscriminately with ruffians, the rights of free-born Englishmen were rudely snatched from them—for them, thenceforward, there was no law save the will of the captain, and the dread articles of war. Shoregoing leave was nonexistent, the food was atrocious and scanty, punishments were barbarous, and the only thing served out with any liberality was rum, on which the men got drunk—and then were flogged for that offense at the gratings next morning.

"In Nelson's time the seamen had few pleasures save the prospect of a hot fight and his daily pint of rum. But to these must be added the vainglorious satisfaction he took in his clothes. When rigged out in his best he frequently wore rings in his ears and silver buckles on his low shoes; his short blue jacket would be decorated with gold buttons and colored ribbons sewn down the seams to add additional gayety; his waistcoat might be red or canary yellow and a black silk handkerchief would be knotted loosely round his throat. As the finishing touch his hair would be hanging in a cue down his back. The broad collars were first worn as a protection against the grease and pomatum used in dressing the pigtail.

"But all these fripperies were discarded when the guns were cast loose from their lashings and the matches were lighted. It was the custom of the men when going into action to strip to the waist. They took their black silk handkerchiefs and bound them very tightly around their heads over their ears, so that the roar of the guns might not deafen them for life. It was remarked that men going into action always wore a sullen frown, however merry they were in their talk.

"Methods followed in that day were curiously primitive and toilsome, but the results were undoubtedly satisfactory, save to the nameless and numberless sailors who met grim death on the black and blood-stained decks or in the dark horror of the cockpit. That those hardy and fearless men often faced death or disablement with a jest or a cheer only renders their unconscious heroism the more impressive."

TRACKED MOOSE MANY DAYS

William Douglass of Eustis, Maine, who at the age of 87 still acts as guide for hunters and kills his full share of game every season, is credited with the longest moose hunt on record. It lasted eighteen days and yielded a prize that paid well for all his work and exposure. The bull moose charged upon him and fell before the last shot in his rifle.

He set out with provisions for ten or twelve days. Soon he came upon large tracks. The moose had passed between two trees that stood so close together that the animal's hide came in contact with the rough bark, leaving tufts of hair adhering to both trees. A little further along he saw where the moose had thrown its head into the air, leaving antlers' marks upon a sapling. Douglass estimated that the animal weighed not less than 1,200 pounds and had antlers spreading fully sixty inches.

For twelve days Douglass hung on the trail. The morning of the thirteenth day found him out of food and suffering from rheumatism. He shot a buck deer that gave him four days' food, and kept on after the big game. On the seventeenth day he caught sight of the moose several times. On the eighteenth day he noticed blood on the trail. At 4 o'clock in the afternoon the hunter heard a loud bellowing, and the next instant saw the moose charging down upon him. Seven shots in rapid succession seemed to have little effect. The infuriated animal was but three jumps away and "Old Bill" had only one cartridge in the magazine.

Just as the great antlers seemed swinging over his head the hunter sent his last shot. It missed the head, but plowed the length of the backbone, cutting the hide as if with a knife, and the moose dropped at the hunter's feet. It weighed 1,125 pounds, and next to the one shot at King Bartlett Lake, was the largest moose ever killed in Maine. That night Douglass rolled himself in all his blankets and then wrapped himself up in the warm hide to keep from freezing. It was a $500 prize.

ENDED THE CHICKENS' ROAMING

"Peter Lorillard Ronalds, who at the age of 78 has completed a 1,000-mile coaching trip, is as wise as he is robust," said a resident of New Rochelle.

"Mr. Ronalds does not believe in quarreling or contention. He claims that, in every difficulty, we can obtain our rights in a peaceful way.

"And he told me the other day how, by the aid of a little thought, he once got his rights from an unreasonable and pigheaded neighbor.

"This neighbor kept chickens. The chickens were not properly penned in. Time and again they escaped and, entering Mr. Ronalds' gardens, did a deal of damage there.

"Time and again Mr. Ronalds remonstrated with the neighbor, who promised to confine his chickens better, but never kept his word.

"And here, where another man would have gotten mad, gone to law, quarreled and squabbled, Mr. Ronalds smiled, and ordered his butler to bring him a dozen eggs.

"He took these eggs into the garden and hid them, under cover of the darkness, in the flower beds where the chickens from next door were most wont to scratch.

"Then, the next morning, when the neighbor was looking over the hedge, Mr. Ronalds sauntered down his garden paths, and, with many pauses and stoopings, picked up one egg here and another there, till he had gotten the dozen, while the neighbor watched him with an expression of stern displeasure and surprise.

"From that day the next-door chickens roamed no more."

RECIPE FOR MODERN SERIAL

A maid—or wife—or widow—with red hair.
And a cool cheek and pale;
Bright, mocking wit (not set down anywhere)—
Great, glinting eyes, soft laces, jewels rare.
And Doucet gowns, that trail.

A man of mark, who's in the Cabinet,
And has the nation's ear;
His hands are clenched, his face is white and set,
The red haired siren he cannot forget,
But has a wife—dear, dear!

The wife's a miracle of womankind,
All wrongs—and gracious curves,
Tho' suffering such agonies of mind
That scarcely she weeps herself half blind.
Her beauty she preserves.

A close lipped, strong jawed Monarch of Finance,
Cynical, ruthless, tall;
All gold, save iron will and steely glance,
He winks—the markets rise—and then, perchance,
He yawns—and down they fall.

Add now some dukes and marquises, to taste,
And "extra" ladies, please.
A wicked foreign Prince—dark eyes, small waist—
A lot of love and commas, too, misplaced,
And not a few of "these!"

Then let your puppets give their show, where'er
It's really smart to be;
Hurlingham, Ascot, Simla, and Mayfair,
Yacht, motor car, balloon—sea, earth, and air,
Sahara and Paree.

Sort 'em, dust 'em, when their work is o'er;
Fresh names, of course, they'll need.
A coat of paint, maybe—and then, once more,
In "Daily Thrills" they'll figure, as before,
And he that runs (to catch his train) may read.

SEVEN YEARS AGO

Rochester Chemist Found a Singularly Effective Medicine.

William A. Franklin, of the Franklin Palmer Chemical Co., Rochester, N. Y., writes:

"Seven years ago I was suffering very much through the failure of the kidneys to eliminate the uric acid from my system. My back was very lame and ached if I exerted myself in the least degree. At times I was weighed down with a feeling of languor and depression and suffered continually from annoying irregularities of the kidney secretions. I secured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and began using them. They helped relief from the aching and lameness in my back, and by the time I had taken three boxes I was entirely free of irregularities."

"HOT-AIR" COFFIN FACTORIES

Lead Many Unwary Investors Into Quicksands of Financial Ruin.

In these days of frenated finance, and the limelight of investigation on insurance corporations, the ordinary public is amazed over the disclosure of how millions are carelessly handled by the heads of large institutions, supposed to be safe and conservative.

One fact revealed by these disclosures, is that the men connected with such institutions, have gotten beyond the days of small capital, and deal with such which rival Uncle Sam's treasury, through which, if successful, they will realize large profits.

How sadly in comparison do the "investors" in many manufacturing enterprises appear, when judged from the standpoint of "knowing what you do," and nowhere is this more patent than with the investor that is constantly sinking funds in the many mushroom coffin factories that appear, and then after a spasm "disappear," either through a "shut down" or through the sheriff.

Did the loss but extend only to these "investors" it would be but the usual result, of not "looking before you leaped," but what of the creditors, and frequently the amounts advanced by "localities" paid to stimulate the new town industries, and often the wages due to workmen.

The prevailing opinion in the public mind that the manufacturing of undertakers' goods returns tremendous profits, is no doubt stimulated by experience had with the undertaker, but in the manufacturing of funeral supplies, the question becomes quite a different proposition, for supply and demand, pure and simple, regulates the price, as it does in all other business, with the exception that "the demands cannot be stimulated, by either style, product, or price, "Father Time," alone controls.

Here is where the over zealous capitalist or community allow promoters, or patriotism to impose upon their credulity, in accepting statements which will not bear the "light of investigation," but through ignorance of conditions, subscribe and put up their cash, only to get wise after it is too late.

Statistics show that there are one hundred and ninety-five casket manufacturing and jobbing plants in the United States, of which 163 are manufacturers of varying capacities, while 19 manufacture approximately 375,000 coffins and caskets annually, 30 manufacture 360,000, 114 manufacture 612,000, or a total of 1,347,000 coffins and caskets, manufactured annually in the United States, all of which must be consumed through the ordinary demand of mortality, but what is the demand? In the mortality abstract of the twelfth census, table number 94, we find that the total deaths from all causes in the registration area of the United States was 512,669 for twelve months, but this registration area was only 38 per cent of the continental territory of the United States. In part I. of the final report on vital statistics, page VII. the final computation shows a death rate in the United States of 16.3 per 1,000, and while this is considered excessive, but assuming it to be correct, it will show approximately only 1,238,000 deaths per year in this country including paupers.

Now what of the 109,000 coffins and caskets produced annually in excess of the demand which the public can not be induced to purchase by the use of any of the ordinary mediums used to stimulate trade as practiced in other lines of business? Unquestionably it is a case of over-supply, which can not be disposed of, and the surplus is more than double the quantity stated, for there is no provision in the estimate for pauper coffins, which are not made in the regular coffin factories, wherens the number of deaths include paupers, and thus the fate of nine out of every ten new coffin plants is clearly written, even before the stock is subscribed, to say nothing of the failure of the old ones.

It sometimes happens that a new plant of this kind, after a hard struggle, succeeds in surviving some of the early ones, but the same amount of capital and energy invested in some other line of business would not run such great risk of failure, while profits in the event of success have proven to be less than any other class of business.

The records show that the average per cent of profit in the casket manufacturing business by houses which have been in business for a number of years, and equipped with the best facilities for turning out their work at the smallest per cent, runs from 7 to 8 per cent, while several, if not the majority of them can do no better than break even, and in a number of instances close down, or are closed out in a few years.

The government statistics of 1900 shows that in that year $13,555,162.00 of capital was invested in the casket manufacturing business, and the value of the product was $13,952,308.00 at a cost of $10,022,829.00 for material and wages, or a gain of only 28 per cent over the amount expended. Now deduct from this the 20 to 25 per cent necessary for the cost of selling, incidental and sundry expenses and it can be readily seen that the profits will be small if any.

Since these figures were tabulated raw material and labor have both advanced considerably with no advance in the finished product, which makes the small margin between the cost of production and the amount realized for the finished goods likely to disappear altogether.

Prince Kuropatkin.

Prince Peter Kuropatkin, the famous Russian social reformer, now resides at Bromley, England. He belongs to one of the proudest and oldest Russian families. It is said that he had a better claim to the throne than Alexander II. His career has been unique. As a boy he wished to study music, but was discouraged by his father, who told him that all a man required to learn of music was how to turn over the pages for a lady. He has been in turn soldier, explorer and geographer, prison reformer, revolutionist, scientist and litterateur. There is much food for reflection in the fact that, although he is now an exile, he was once in such favor at the Russian court that he was appointed chamberlain to the czarina.

Dolls as Educators.

A novel idea has been realized in Paris by M. Leo Claretie, who, besides being an eminent educationist, is an ardent advocate of rendering education attractive. His system of the history of France in dressed dolls is to be placed on public exhibition as an object lesson in its capabilities. Even the prehistoric periods, whose life can only be known on the testimony of the rocks, are represented. Within the pale of history every age is represented by its leading figures, as Gaul, pro-Roman, Roman and Frankish. Then come the crusades, the English wars, the later middle ages, the early modern period, and so on to the third republic.

A Portable Soup Tureen in London.

Hundreds of portable soup tureens have been brought into service by an association organized for charitable purposes in the Hammersmith district of London. The object is to supply all who may be in need of immediate sustenance with hot soup and bread at the cost of a penny. The scheme became so popular at once that the demand could not be supplied and the number of soup barrows was increased by the hundred. It has already been demonstrated that the association will be kept active in the administration of its charity.

Remarkable Statue of Satan.

A curious statue was set up in a street near his dwelling by an eccentric German citizen of Detroit. It is dedicated to Satan and is dominated by a figure of the father of lies. It is a fair example of modern sculpture but the city authorities object to its presence in a public thoroughfare, and it will be removed. The Detroit Turnverein recently visited the statue in a body and drank toasts to owner and sculptor.

The Earl of Caithness, a Scotch nobleman, who owns Berriedale farm, in North Dakota, is forty-eight years old and a bachelor. He once tried to introduce the Highland dress among the poor folk in North Dakota, but the women refused to take kindly to his way of thinking, and so he didn't attempt to force the idea.

AN AWFUL SKIN HUMOR

Covered Head, Neck and Shoulders—Suffered Agony For Twenty-Five Years Until Cured by Cuticura.

"For twenty-five years I suffered agony from a terrible humor, completely covering my head, neck and shoulders, discharging matter of such offensiveness to sight and smell that I became an object of dread. I consulted the most able doctors far and near, to no avail. Then I got Cuticura, and in a surprisingly short time I was completely cured. I advise all those suffering from skin humors to get Cuticura and end their misery at once. S. P. Keyes, 149 Congress Street, Boston, Mass."

TUMORS CONQUERED

SERIOUS OPERATIONS AVOIDED

Unqualified Success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound in the Case of Mrs. Fannie D. Fox.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy, Tumor.

The growth of a tumor is so sly that frequently its presence is not suspected until it is far advanced.

Mrs. Fannie D. Fox

So-called "wandering pains" may come from its early stages, or the presence of danger may be made manifest by profuse menstruation, accompanied by unusual pain, from the ovaries down the groin and thighs.

If you have mysterious pains, if there are indications of inflammation or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation; secure Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound right away and begin its use.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., will give you her advice free of all charge if you will write her about yourself. Your letter will be seen by women only.

Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"I take the liberty to congratulate you on the success I have had with your wonderful medicine. Eighteen months ago my monthlies stopped. Shortly after I felt so badly that I submitted to a thorough examination by a physician and was told that I had a tumor on the uterus and would have to undergo an operation.

"Soon after I read one of your advertisements and decided to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial. After trying five bottles as directed the tumor is entirely gone. I have been examined by a physician and he says I have no signs of a tumor now. It has also brought my monthlies around once more, and I am entirely well."—Fannie D. BODIES BLOWN Into Bits---19 Men Reported Missing in Mine Horror by Powder Explosion.

TWO HOTELS ARE WRECKED.

Property Loss Is Believed Now to Be Between $50,000 and $100,000.

Spokane, Wash.—The powder magazine of the Center Star and War Eagle mintes at Rossland, B. C., exploded about 1:45 p. m. Saturday.

It is reported that many men are dead and many injured.

A special from Rossland to the Chronicle, timed 3:10 p. m. stated that 19 men are still missing since the explosion.

One body, that of J. S. Ingraham, who was in charge of the magazine, has been recovered.

The search for the dead is handicapped by the fire in the ruins of the wrecked magazine.

Another magaine close by is in danger from the fire.

Two hotels were demolished by the explosion. It is reported that nearly 100 persons were cut by the broken glass.

The property loss is estimated at from $50,000 to $100,000.

The location of the magazine was on a hillside overlooking the town and about one-half mile distant from it.

Five Mangled By Explosion.

Marquette, Mich.—Five men were killed by an explosion today at the Dupont company's dynamite works here.

About 1,400 pounds of nitroglycerine exploded in the mixing house, which is three miles distance from Marquette.

The explosion badly damaged the plant and caused much excitement in Marquette. The dead are all workmen employed by the Dupont company. The men were blown into shreds. Of the thirty buildings in the plant few escaped damage and some were badly wrecked.

Arguments Against Tariff Reduction.

Washington.—Tobacco interests were represented Saturday at the ways and means committee hearing on the Philippine tariff. J. W. Upston spoke for the New York tobacco growers, and E. N. Phelps, of Windsor, Conn., protested on behalf of the Connecticut Valley tobacco raisers against any changes. J. H. Pierce, of Connecticut, also spoke against reduction of duty on Philippine tobacco, and predicted that the proposed change would ruin the tobacco interests in New England.

State to Act Against Aid Association.

Montgomery, Ala.—A commotion was produced in insurance circles of Alabama when Insurance Commissioner E. R. McDavid announced that he would lay before Attorney-General Massey Wilson a report on the condition of the Southern Mutual Aid Association, of Birmingham, for him to act as he sees fit, giving as his opinion that the company should be restrained from doing further business in the state. The attitude of Commissioner McDavid is due to the disclosures of a special examination which he recently ordered into the affairs of the Southern Mutual Aid Association. The disclosures are of a sensational order and were Friday made public for the first time. The report of the examination, which was made by Col. H. R. Shorter, deputy insurance commissioner, recommended that the charter of the company should be forfeited on account of the excess of liabilities over assets.

Twenty Years for Lon Pippin.

Anniston, Ala.—Lon Pippin, charged with the murder of J. W. Trigg, was the very emblem of composure when the jury in his case filed into the court room Friday to render the verdict that was to decide his guilt or innocence, and when Foreman Catlett announced a verdict of murder in the second degree, recommending a sentence of twenty years in the penitentiary, he showed not the slightest sign of emotion. The verdict of the jury was read at about 10:30 a. m. and almost immediately after the defendant was taken in charge by Chief Deputy Sheriff LeGrande, who again placed him in his cell.

Montgomery Jail Fire.

Montgomery, Ala.—A fire in the woman's department at the county jail, which originated in the kitchen, came near ending the life of several women prisoners, and may yet result in the death of one of the inmates, Henrietta Howard. The lives of 100 persons were at one time threatened.

A certain gentleman on being asked to subscribe toward sending out a missionary to one of the cannibal islands of the Pacific, is reported to have answered, in the most discouraging manner: "Certainly not. I am a vegetarian."—Argonaut.

Trains on the principal British railways traveled over 150,000,000 miles during the first half of this year.

Anniston Fire of $56,000.

Anniston, Ala.—Fire Saturday night completely destroyed the large wholesale grocery store of the Thomason Grocery Company. The loss is about $50,000. The building was valued at about $3,000, with $5,000 insurance, and the stock at about $40,000, with about $30,000 insurance. The origin of the fire is unknown, and the firemen had to work to prevent the fire spreading on account of the great headway it had obtained before the alarm was turned in. The firm has one of the largest trades in Northeast Alabama. It was moved here two years ago from Oxford.

The Cudahy Packing Company had office and warerooms adjoining, which were also destroyed. Their loss will amount to about $7,000, with insurance. All their books were destroyed.

Refuses to Resign.

Montgomery, Ala.—David Pressley of $100,000. Birmingham, they say, is lacking in cold storage facilities. The facilities now at command for this purpose are so limited that local merchants have to resort for storage purposes to far-away cities like Chicago, New York and even Boston.

Farmer Is Wounded.

Jacksonville, Ala.—In a personal difficulty at Ramagnane's mill, a few miles east of this city, Lon Snider shot and probably fatally wounded Frank White. Several shots were fired, and it is said serious wounds were inflicted in White's abdomen and side, in addition to a slight esh wound in his scalp.

Thompson Will Resign Chairmanship.

Birmingham, Ala.—In republican circles it is definitely understood that Joseph O. Thompson, collector of internal revenue, will at an early date resign the chairmanship of the republican state committee.

Death Instantaneous.

Birmingham, Ala.—George N. Hancock, a night watchman for the Southern Bell Telephone and Telegraph Company, was instantly killed by an incoming East Lake car of the Birmingham Railway, Light and Power Company. The car was No. 209, in charge of Conductor G. W. Baggett and Motorman J. D. Self was at the controller.

Hoch to Hang.

Springfield, Ill.—The supreme court has affirmed the Johann Hoch case. He will be hanged on February 23.

Took Wrong Drug.

Tuscaloosa, Ala.—News has been received here from Elrod announcing the sudden death of Mrs. J. M. Mills. From what can be learned it seems that Mrs. Mills was suffering from a sick headache and by mistake took strychnine instead of quinine, and before aid could be rendered she was dead. She was the wife of Capt. J. M. Mills, was 65 years of age and had a very wide circle of friends.

New Corporations.

Montgomery, Ala.—The secretary of state has been informed of the incorporation of the following Montgomery firms:

Woodruff Company—Capital stock, $3,000; incorporators, L. N. Woodruff, W., L. F. and F. G. Woodruff.

Gay, Hardie & Durr Drug Company—Capital stock, $100,000; incorporators, Bradford Hardie, John W. Durr, Jr., and Charles L. Gay.

New Official Soon.

Anniston, Ala.—The place of general agent of the Louisville and Nashville Railway at Anniston will be filled by Hiram P. Salter, of New Orleans, who has been in this city making arrangements for moving here January 1 to assume full control of the local office.

Poultry Show Was Best Yet.

Birmingham, Ala.—"The ninth annual poultry show of the Alabama Poultry and Pet Stock Association, which closed Friday night, was the best in the history of the organization," said Secretary Charles Barber. "The show was a success financially and otherwise, and the breeds represented in the entries were a credit to Birmingham and to Alabama."

Child Is Burned.

Cullman, Ala.—The bed in the residence of Mr. Barney Weggerman, of West Cullman, caught fire, and his 6-year-old child was horribly burned and ided. His wife was also seriously burned.

Jasper Roundhouse Destroyed by Fire.

Jasper, Ala.—The roundhouse of the Northern Alabama Railroad was entirely destroyed by fire here Friday [af]ternoon.

5,000 VICTIMS

Have Fallen in Moscow Horror —Many Innocent People Meet Death.

COMMUNICATION IS UNCERTAIN.

Population Cowers in Kitchens Stricken With Fear and Trembling at Boom of Cannon.

London.—The correspondent of the Daily Telegraph at St. Petersburg, in a dispatch dated at 6:45 p. m. December 25, says:

"At an early hour this morning the casualties at Moscow were estimated at 5,000 killed and 14,000 wounded, with the fighting still proceeding.

"The inhabitants of Moscow have been forbidden to leave their dwellings after 7 o'clock in the evening.

"It is impossible to move about the city in consequence of the frenquency of stray bullets. Many innocent persons have been accidentally killed.

"A scarcity of provisions is threatened."

The same correspondent, telegraphing at 10:38 p. m., says:

"Your Moscow correspondent's telegrams have not been accepted because all private messages were refused this afternoon.

It is learned, however, that cannon firing is now proceeding in various parts of thecity, where tonight very near the railroad stations the barricades erected by the revolutionaries are being desperately defended.

"The Kursk terminus at Moscow is being pillaged, and many wagons laden with provisions are being looted.

"The emperor is engaged daily in reviewing at Tsarskoe-Selo the regiments of the St. Petersburg district. The spirit of the troops is decidedly loyal.

"From fragmentary accounts received from Moscow I gather that the civil war has brought no decisive action, but only a thickening of the blood cloud, an intensifying of the horrors and increase of prevailing bitterness.

"The driving force behind both the troops and the rebels is no longer that of enthusiasm or of any human impulse. It is the force of superhuman hate, and hence the deeds reported are not the acts of patriots, soldiers or otherwise, but the enormities of mad men.

"For every barricade destroyed Sunday two or three appeared in other places. Orders were given by the revolutionists to shoot only when there was good hope of bring a man down, but otherwise to tire out the troops until they lost patience.

"In the meantime in their houses the bulk of the population cowers in the innermost recesses of kitchens and cellars, stricken with fear and trembling at every boom of the cannon or the explosion of a bomb.

"The most surprising thing of all is the loyalty of the troops, which nobody here anticipated.

"Talking with an intelligent group of St. Petersburg revolutionists, I was informed that while they believed the strike would be victorious, they fully realized that they were staking everything upon the issue and that failure would set back their cause for several years. They said they were devoting their efforts to shaking the foundations of Russian finance, in full confidence that once the existing regime was overthrown they could as quickly build another, and that foreign nations would be as ready to advance money to a democratic republic as to the autocracy. They emphatically denied that they were inciting the peasantry to commit agrarian outrages, declaring that these outrages were the work of the socialists, but they did not deny their advocacy of the distribution of the crown lands among the peasants.

"In conclusion they declared that in event of failure of their cause they would have recourse to terrorism, choosing their victims from all classes of society."

Jews Were Aggressors.

Boston, Mass.—According to Andreas Stockberger, an immigrant who arrived here on the steamer Carthagenia, the bloodshed in Odessa was largely due to the Jews attacking the soldiers. The immigrant is a German and comes from a German settlement at Gildendorf, near Odessa.

In an interview he said:

"In Odessa I saw troops march down the main street with loaded guns. Before them was the howling mob, armed with all sorts of weapons, and whenever a chance appeared they would sweep down on the soldiers and tear them to pieces. From house tops and windows stood men and women and even children, and as the soldiers marched by bombs were hurled at them, killing scores and wounding hundreds at a time.

"The soldiers would then charge upon their attackers, piercing with bayonets and shooting them. Wherever the soldiers went they were attacked. The mob, made up entirely of Jews, were almost beside themselves with excitement, and the only purpose was to kill the soldiers."

Two Killed—Three Hurt.

Meridian, Miss.—In a tail-end collision on the Alabama and Vicksburg Railroad at Chunkey two men were killed, three others seriously injured and a train load of passengers badly shaken up.

The dead were Vance Lader, fireman, and Peter Kenosky.

The injured: Engineer Tucker, ribs broken and badly cut; fireman of freight engine, badly bruised and cut; Engineer Dave Coker, arms and breast bruised and cut.

Some Christmas Casualities.

Louisville, Ky.—Three fatalities and an unusual number of minor accidents resulted from Louisville's noisy celebration of Christmas.

Theresa Housman, an 8-year-old girl, was killed by George Doll, 12 years of age. The girl's death resulted from the unsuspected presence of a ball cartridge among the number of blanks which the Doll boy, a neighbor, was firing in a rifle.

George Irving Harper, a boy 14 years of age, met death in an unusual manner. While Harper was tamping a charge in a small cannon with a broomstick, another boy exploded a firecracker over the touchhole, setting off the cannon. The broomstick was driven through Harper's neck, killing him instantly.

Ella Barret, a negro girl, was killed by a stray bullet from the revolver of a negro who was celebrating the day.

Houston, Tex.—Christmas was productive of several accidents in this city. A toy lamp exploded and Thelma Cupper, aged 3, was burned to death.

A. Anderson was playing Santa Claus, when his clothing caught fire, and there is little hope for his recovery.

Washington, Pa.—Just as she was hanging a doll for her little sister on a Christmas tree at her home in Hazelkirk Mary, the 9-year-old daughter of James Kennedy, received a bullet in the head from a revolver fired through the door from outside. She died from the effects of the wound. Four arrests have been made pending an investigation.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Returning home after gladdening the hearts of relatives and friends with Christmas gifts, Charles H. Hansen, a well-to-do farmer, and his 8-year-old daughter, Edna, were instantly killed by being struck by a Reading express train at Cattle Hill, fifteen miles north of this city.

McClellan to Win.

New York.—Certificates of election were presented to Mayor McClellan and the other candidates who on the face of the returns were successful at the last election.

Exact figures have not been given out, but it is known the plurality of Mayor McClellan has been reduced by about 300 from the figures given out by the police on election night, giving him by the corrected figures a plurality over William R. Hearst of about 3,400.

No opposition will be made on behalf of Mr. Hearst to the issuance of a certificate to Mayor McClellan, but there has been no withdrawal of the announced plan to ask the legislature to make a complete investigation of the election. With the evidence brought out in such an inquiry as a basis, it is declared that quo warranto proceedings will be instituted to test the right of the mayor to hold his office.

Election bets, however, will be paid without more delay. About $1,500,000 has been tied up in the hands of stakeholders since before election.

Killed in Collision.

East St. Louis, Ill.—One man was killed and three injured in an accident in the railroad yards here, caused by a freight train backing into a street car.

The dead: John Daugherty, St. Louis.

Injured: H. C. Plem, Virginia City, Neb.; F. E. Hathaway, East St. Louis; George Walters, East St. Louis.

The street car was badly damaged. The street car crew declare there were no lights on the rear of the freight and that they had no warning of its approach.

Canadian Minister Dead.

Paris.—Raymond Prefontaine, the Canadian minister of marine and fisheries, died suddenly Monday night.

PROCLAIMS MARTIAL LAW

Czar Believed to Have Hastened the Crisis in Russia.

RETURNS TO HIS OLD METHODS

Army Asks the People to Back the Revolutionary Party—Emperor in Terror in Tsarskoe-Selo — Witte Again Reported to Have Resigned as Premier—Troops Support the People.

St. Petersburg, Russia.—All his concessions and promises of concessions having failed to stay the wrath of his awakened subjects, Emperor Nicholas has entered on an aggressive campaign of repression. He has turned absolutely around from his attitude of a ruler amenable to public opinion, and has pitted the autocracy in open fight against the proletariat. By the signing of an imperial proclamation practically declaring martial law over all of Russia the Czar has made all his official acts toward the enactment of constitutional liberty a tragic farce. Nicholas has willed that the semblance of freedom which had been wrung from him is to be taken away again, and his reign of despotism made more arrogant and oppressive than ever.

This amazing return to the plan of government which brought about the present discontent, and the news of the spread of mutiny in the Moscow garrison, has caused a tremendous sensation all over the capital. It is believed that the crisis which will settle the fate of Russia has been reached and that any hour will bring desperate fighting in the streets and on all sides of the Winter Palace. The populace is filled with rage against the Czar, and crowds have been parading all day and defying the soldiers to fire on them. The Emperor has estranged the small minority that remained loyal to him. The leaders of the revolutionists assert that his latest decree will go down in history as his death warrant. It is argued that he has violated all his pledges, and that sooner or later he will go to as miserable a death as Louis XVI.

The first intimation of the revival of the "white terror" was in the arrest late at night of many of the revolutionary leaders. Hundreds of police were set on the hunt for men of all classes who had been known to be joining in the active agitation against the autocracy. Only one of all the officers of the Workmen's Council escaped arrest, but in half an hour after the round-up by the police a new body of officers had been elected, with M. Lenient, editor of New Life, as President. Before midnight the same assembly had issued a call for a general strike. This was the answer to the Czar's drastic act, and it has been responded to with the greatest enthusiasm by the workmen.

It is hard to realize to what length the Emperor has gone in his attempt to steady his rocking throne. He has given over the government of the Empire into the hands of thousands of military officers, scattered over as many districts. In an imperial order sent out from Tsarskoe-Selo Palace all governor-generals, governors and prefects throughout the country are clothed with almost dictatorial powers, being authorized without consulting St. Petersburg, to declare a state of siege, and even martial law.

Panic in Witte Ministry.

The news from Moscow has caused panic among the Witte Ministry, and one of the first results of the word of the mutiny was the report that Witte himself had resigned. This has been officially denied, but the revolutionists say that the first bloodshed in the capital will mean Witte's downfall. The only loyal troops remaining in Moscow are the Cossacks. So grave is the situation there that a Cossack regiment has been rushed through from here on a special train. All the men of the line regiments in the old capital if not in open mutiny are bordering on it, and freely express their opinions.

An ultimatum formally presented to General Plavoffski, a division commander, not only demands service reforms, but political freedom. The document probably is the most important yet drawn in the fight against the Czar, as it means the loss of his strongest weapon in the army. Accompanying the demands is a threat that if all points are not conceded the mutineers will parade the city and arouse the entire populace into active rebellion. In preparing for this contingency the mutineers have issued an appeal to the citizens. The appeal is as striking in its way as the ultimatum delivered into the hands of Plavoffski. It was distributed through the city printed on handbills.

The Rostoff grenadier regiment to a man held possession of the barracks, in defiance of assault, until early in the evening, when the defection of two battalions with a machine gun detachment led to the end of the active mutiny. The men later paraded under command of their officers, but before they were marched back again to their quarters they made known through a deputation that they did not withdraw from the demands they had presented. The regiment while technically loyal actually is still in a state of revolt, and it is impossible to predict what may come out of the position.

It is certain that not a man in the regiment will be punished, as the mutineers had the sympathy of the three other grenadier regiments—the Finntenskay, the Taurid and the Nowish.

CONVICT AIDS ANOTHER

Albert T. Patrick Acts as Counsel to John Johnson in Sing Sing.

Both Men Are Under Sentence of Death in New York State Prison — Plea Made to Court of Appeals.

Sing Sing, N. Y.—Albert T. Patrick, under sentence of death, has prevented the execution of a fellow condemned man. John Johnson was to have been electrocuted in the morning.

Johnson was convicted for wife murder six weeks ago in Westchester County.

Johnson's lawyers concluded that there was no ground for an appeal.

"My counsel is not going to appeal my case," said Prisoner Johnson, "and I see no use in building up hope."

Patrick, who had just returned from New York City, where he had been sentenced by Justice Rogers to die in the electric chair in the week beginning January 22, asked Johnson to tell him of the case.

Patrick Gives Aid.

"Of course," said Patrick, "you must be guided by your counsel. If you will retain me as your legal representative I will guarantee that the sentence of death will not be carried out next week."

"But how can I retain you as my counsel?"

"Very simple, indeed," said Patrick. "Just sign the affidavit which I shall prepare for you, and I will then be entitled to act for you."

Patrick then prepared the necessary legal document. Johnson signed it, and a notary witnessed the signature in the regular form.

"You leave the rest to me," said Patrick. "As your counsel, I advise you to be guided solely by what your counsel directs you to do."

The other six convicted murderers did not understand how Patrick was going to accomplish something that Johnson's own lawyer had been unable to do.

"Please take this paper to Johnson's cell," Patrick called to one of his guards. Then he told Johnson to sign it. He did.

"Now," announced Patrick, "I would like to see anybody try and take you out of your cell next week. Your execution will surely be stayed."

The paper which Johnson had signed was an affidavit in which he asserts that he was not granted a fair trial. Then Patrick wrote another document, in which it was set forth that he had been duly retained as counsel for "one John Johnson, under sentence of death and awaiting execution in Sing Sing as prescribed by law." Another paper was in the form of a notice to the clerk of the Court of Appeals in Albany that one, "Albert T. Patrick, attorney and counselor-at-law, now residing in the State Prison, in Sing Sing, N. Y.," had been duly retained as counsel for Johnson, and that said notice was to act also as a notice that an appeal would be argued from the judgment of the lower court.

Warden Johnson was sent for and Patrick handed all the papers to him.

Appeal Sent to Albany.

"You will be good enough to forward these official documents to the Clerk of the Court of Appeals, in Albany," said Patrick to the Warden; "they are in the case of the People of the State of New York vs. John Johnson. I am the attorney in the case."

The papers were duly forwarded to Albany.

Patrick says that he will insist that he be taken to the Court of Appeals when the day for the argument in the case comes up.

"I am going to argue your case in person," Patrick said to Johnson, "and what is more, I am certain right now that I will secure you a new trial."

The application filed by Patrick in behalf of Johnson acted as a stay of all proceedings.

FOUR KILLED IN THEATRE FIRE.

Woman and Her Two Children Among the Victims.

Lorain, Ohio.—Four lives were lost in a fire which destroyed the Verbeck Theatre here early in the morning. The dead are James Dwyer, twenty-eight years; Mrs. William Marsh, twenty-four, and her two children, Grace, three years old, and Clifford, seven months.

The Marsh family had apartments in the front of the building on the third floor. William Marsh was stage manager. Dwyer, another employe, slept in the basement, where the fire originated. Mrs. Marsh and her children were suffocated by the smoke which poured up the narrow stairway.

Mrs. John Vesper was rescued by the firemen after she had fainted and was leaning out of a window. The loss on the theatre, which was a comparatively new one, is $35,000. The loss on the building is $50,000. The theatre was owned by the Verbeck Amusement Company, of Oil City, Pa., and leased by H. H. Dykman, of Elyria, Ohio.

THREE GENERATIONS KILLED.

Train Hits Carriage Containing Baby, Mother and Grandmother.

Toledo, Ohio.—Mrs. John Lashaway, her daughter-in-law and the infant son of the latter were instantly killed at Weston in the afternoon at the crossing of the Cincinnati, Hamilton and Dayton Railroad. It is thought that the side curtains shut out the view of the train.

LIBBIE GARRABRANT FREE

New Jersey Murderess Paroled After Thirty-Five Years in Prison.

WOMAN LAWYER WON HER FIGHT

Sentenced to Be Hanged When She Was Only Seventeen. She Leaves Trenton Prison a Gray-Haired Wreck—Three Wealthy Women Will Care For Her in the Future.

Trenton, N. J.—When Libbie Garrabrant, who has served nearly thirty-five of the fifty-two years of her life in prison for a murder which she says was prompted by a man she loved, was told that she had been pardoned, she sank upon her knees and uttered a fervent prayer of thanks to the Almighty.

Then lifting her pale, tear-stained face, and gazing steadily at those who stood about her, she said, "Thank God! Thank God! This will be the happiest Christmas of all my miserable life!"

Following her first outburst of gratitude to Divine Providence the woman broke down and sobbed hysterically for many minutes before she could express her thanks to the Court of Pardons, which authorized her release, and the hundreds of men and women who have so long labored in her behalf. Several hours later she became comparatively quiet and could talk with a degree of calmness of the future.

George O. Osborne, head keeper of the prison, broke the news of the pardon to her. He went to the prison hospital, where she has long been an inmate, and by an effort concealed from his manner any indication of the news he bore. She knew that the court had been considering her case and tried to read her fate in the face of the keeper.

"Are you ready for good or bad news?" he asked.

"Oh, Mr. Osborne, I am ready for either, for anything."

She tried to be brave, but her lips trembled and her face paled even beyond its prison pallor.

"Be ready for good news," said Mr. Osborne, as gently as possible, while the prison matron and a nurse stood near lest the good news be too much for her. After a moment there came into the face of the woman a look almost of doubt, of suspicion that her ears were deceiving her, and then she bent her head in prayer. The others stood back in respectful silence while she prayed.

Then at a signal from Mr. Osborne the nurse gave her a stimulant and she was led away to a bed, where she was told to sleep. Sleep, however, was out of the question. She could only smile and sigh and laugh and sob by turns.

"It seems almost too good to be true," she said, "to think that after all these years I am to go out into the world again a free woman—into the world which seems to me almost like a dream. And to think that all my friends are strangers; everybody has been so good to me. I only want to do whatever I can to prove to the world that I am worthy of the sympathy that has been bestowed upon me. I feel that I cannot be grateful enough."

Her removal from the prison was arranged by Miss Mary Philbrook, a Newark lawyer and probation officer of Essex County. Miss Philbrook has long been interested in the woman's case. Those of the Pardon Court who voted against Libbie Garrabrant's release were: Chancellor Magie, Judge Green and Judge Bogert. Those who favored it were: Governor Stokes, Judges Vroom, Vredenberg, Dill and Grey.

At a late hour at night friends of the woman took her away from the prison, driving her in a closed carriage through a rear gate. This deceived all watchers, and no one except her friends know where she is.

Libbie Garrabrant's crime was the poisoning of Charles Burroughs, of Paterson, for whom she kept house at a time his wife was serving a prison term. She says the crime was prompted by Van Winkle Bogart, who was jealous of Burroughs. Bogart was tried as an accomplice, but he was acquitted. The girl, who was pretty then and only about seventeen years old, was convicted and sentenced to be hanged. The sentence was commuted. Imprisonment for life was imposed, and for nearly thirty-five years she has not been outside the prison walls.

She was born in Williamsburg, N. Y., in 1853, and a few years later moved with her parents to Paterson. Her family was poor and she was put to work in one of the silk mills at the age of ten. There she became acquainted with Bogart, and it was he, she says, who prompted the murder of Burroughs.

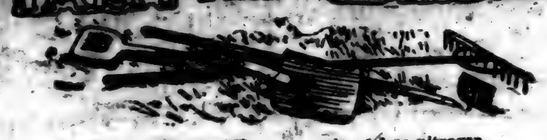
FARM AND GARDEN



RAISE SOME SHEEP.

There is perhaps no farm animal loss known and appreciated by the average farmer than the sheep, and still there is scarcely a farm where some sheep could not be kept at a good profit. Keeping sheep on a small farm means that the land must be fenced, otherwise it is not a practical proposition, says Successful Farming. For that reason the majority of renters are not in a position to avail themselves of the services of a flock. While it is true that sheep cannot be raised to advantage on low and poorly drained land still there are few farms where a flock of lambs could not be kept during the fall of the year after harvest to clean up the shelled grain and consume a lot of weeds that are sure to grow. A sheep will eat almost any kind of weeds and apparently thrive on them, and here is where their great value lies; it is an animal that is capable of converting waste products on the farm into a source of revenue.

Next spring it would be well to seed some rape in the small grain as this will produce a large amount of feed by the time the grain is stacked. Rape may also be seeded in the corn field just before the last cultivation, then when the proper time arrives have a bunch of lambs ready, turn them in the stubble fields and let them clean up one field at a time, thus going ahead of the plow. From these fields they may be turned into the corn field and into the meadow and later on be finished for the market on grain. Oftentimes screenings may be fed to advantage.

Those who practice buying lambs in the fall and feeding them in the manner outlined declare they seldom fail to get a good profit out of the investment and besides get their farms cleared of weeds. Sheep feeding, especially where a large gain is obtained at practically no cost at all, is not a hazardous business like cattle feeding and most any farmer in fair circumstances can avail himself of the extra profits as he can always borrow enough money on the flock to make the original purchase. The investment is a short one and the profits are realized in a few months. It is a good way to pay for fencing the farm. Two or three neighbors could club together and buy a carload at a time so as to save freight charges. The lambs may either be purchased by the farmers themselves or through commission firms at stock yards. A farm of 160 acres is usually capable of supporting 160 lambs in the manner suggested. Think this matter over and begin to prepare for a flock next fall.

GROWING CATALPAS.

Having received a number of letters of enquiry in regard to the Catalpa, I promised to give my experience in the Farmer. I sowed the seed three years ago, as for parsnips, and raised 187 which I planted in rows 4x4 feet. At one years growth, cut back six inches. They made a growth of from four to six feet. This year some of them have grown to 15 feet in height, and as straight as a fish pole. Last spring I planted another grove that will average 5½ feet.

I now have a thousand yearlings that will average 3½ feet, which I transplant next spring. I give them thorough cultivation and good soil.

I know they are of the hardy variety, as I have timber cut 13 years ago that shows no signs of decay, the bark still adhering to the posts.

Bulletin from the U. S. Agricultural Department No 37, informs me that a post can be raised in six years and telephone pole in 16 years.

My experience as an amateur is that the seed should be gathered in March, when the beans begin to open, wrapped up in a wet cloth and buried to keep moist. The seed bed is made as for garden, and sowed about as for parsnips; thin to three inches in the row.

In transplanting cut stalk back 6 inches leaving but one sprout, plant 4 feet in the row, and 4 feet apart. I use no horse in their cultivation, planting a row of potatoes between and making them a hoe crop.

A pest has appeared this year in a 3 inch copper colored worm with dark spots, but it yields readily to Paris green treatment.

In the summer of 1904 the drouth and early fall rains caused a second growth, which caused the late growth to be winter killed; this caused many sprouts to start. I cut back the top which caused a rank sprout and but little crop is noticed on the tree at this time.

The heavy leaves on the trees, I find, when wet, are easily blown over, and their weight causes them to become crooked. They should receive cultivation at this time, be straightened up, and the leaves trimmed from that side. Don't expect a grove without labor and attention.—V. M. C. in Indiana Farmer.

THERE'S MILLIONS IN THE SOIL.

A recent bulletin from the Illinois Experiment Stations asserts that "at ordinary commercial prices the nitrogen contained in the air above each acre is worth more than ten million dollars and goes on to say: "By means of bacteria which live on their roots, clover and other legumes have power to draw on this unlimited supply of free nitrogen.

"The ordinary, naturally well surfaced-drained land of the corn belt in central and northern Illinois contains in the soil of one acre to a depth of seven inches sufficient total potassium for a hundred bushels of corn each year for 1900 years, if the stalks are returned to the land directly or in manure. The supply is about 36,000 pounds and one hundred bushels of corn (grain only) contain 19 pounds of potassium. Potassium may be liberated from the soil as needed, by means of decaying organic matter, such as farm manure, clover residues, and legume catch crops as green manures.

"If we could draw at will upon the total phosphorus in the first seven inches of soil the supply (about 1200 pounds) would be entirely exhausted to that depth during the lifetime of one man if hundred-bushel crops of corn were taken from the land. A hundred-bushel crop of corn requires seventeen pounds of phosphorus for the grain and six pounds for the stalks. Oats, wheat, and clover also draw heavily upon phosphorus. When crops are fed the animals store in their bones about one-fourth of the phosphorus contained in the food consumed."

Illinois soil is not the same as ours, but the air above is alike everywhere. Nitrogen is the most valuable ingredient in fertilizers, and it is encouraging to know that it is everywhere so abundant. Clover has the power of catching and holding nitrogen, therefore we must grow clover whatever else we fail to grow.—Indiana Farmer.

FEEDING WARM MASHES.

Now that the season is approaching when the poultry must be housed more or less closely the annual subject of feeding the warm mash comes up for consideration. We were formerly strong advocates of the warm mash in the morning; then we turned to the plan of giving it at night and liberally in either period. Now we stand on a middle ground, for with our flocks, mainly of the larger breeds, it was found that the liberal feeds of warm mash put the fat on, and when the fat goes on too heavily the eggs begin to fall short.

We then worked along the plan of feeding the mash in the morning during moderate weather and at night in colder weather; indeed, the fowls are not a little hungry when they have finished, but, on the other hand, they don't stand around with a dreamy look in their eyes which comes from a full stomach, but get to work vigorously to scratch out the grain in the chaff on the scratching shed floor. To make up for our stinginess in quantity of mash we make it appetizing by using a little wheat in the bran as well as bits of meat and vegetables chopped fine. Experience through two seasons of feeding in this manner has convinced us that it is the correct plan. Don't go to the other extreme and cut the mash out entirely until this suggestion has been tried.

FEEDING CORN FODDER.

In the States where the corn crop is large much of it goes to needless waste, which with a little care might be made to add to the farm profits. The wasteful plan of throwing it in great stacks to the animals, leaving them to eat what they will and trample the rest under foot, can not be profitable, no matter how large the corn crop one has at command. To get the most from the corn fodder, if it is not in the form of silage, it should be cut or shredded, preferably the latter. Of course, in some sections perhaps this may not be done with profit, but it may be cut even in the old-fashioned cutter and pay for the labor.

The time to feed the corn fodder to best advantage is early in the season and simply because after mid-winter it has lost much of its feeding value and the cows fail to do well on it and tire of the sameness. The other materials used for roughage can be saved until labor in the winter and in the spring. The corn fodder may be made more appetizing by feeding a small ration of root crops, although the bulk of the roots should be saved for later feeding when the cows become more anxious for green food.—Indianapolis News.

The Girls of Caddo.

Caddo has some real live girls. A tenderfoot struck this town yesterday and proceeded to accumulate an overstocked cargo of gayety. He selected for his subjects a couple of girls with quite as fervid an appreciation of fun as he had himself. Simulating anger because of his advances, they took after him and chased him across back lots through a Mexican's tamale patch and the last seen of him he jumped over a wagonyard fence and fell. He arose, and when he faced his pursuers fell on his knees and his prayer was: "My God, you don't intend to kill me, do you?" The man still lives and the girls wear a smile that won't come off.—South McAlester (Ind. T.) News.

The Mexican government is giving attention to the problem of irrigation on a large scale.

WAR AGAINST POWDER PUFFS.

Having effected several important social reforms designed for the safeguarding of society, the authorities of Indiana have taken up the question of cosmetics. The order has gone forth that every box containing preparations to be used on the face shall be plainly marked with skull and crossbones. Unless it is thus stamped it cannot be sold in the state.

In explaining this action the officials maintain that cosmetics are poisonous, but the prime object of the reform is doubtless much larger. It is reasonable to assume that its chief purpose is to put down the powder puff or its still more deadly companion, the powder rag. Even the most careless observer, when passing through Indiana and certain other states, has noticed the growing addition to this article.

On the rare occasions when it has been seen by the masculine eye it has been observed to consist of a scrap of chamois, linen or silk, folded and crumpled into compact form and bearing a whitish smudge on one side. Used with discretion and at rare intervals, it may be true, as its devotees affirm, that it is not especially injurious, but often it is not thus used.

At times the victim lapses into a condition of complete dependence upon her powder rag. Instead of being used as an ordinary article of the toilet, it is carried everywhere, secretly hidden away in handbags and reticules in company with a pocket mirror. The secrecy is useless, for she soon betrays herself.

At one moment she appears fatigued, depressed and ill at ease. A few seconds' stealthy communication with the mirror and the stimulating powder rag and she suddenly reappears blooming, fresh and happy. In hopeless cases she may even be observed making furtive dabs with the implements in public.

No doubt the real object of the Indiana authorities is to prevent the growth of this insiduous habit of taking a powdered rag "bracer" whenever the nerves are unstrung or the victim desires a momentary exhilaration.

That they are going about the reform in the right way is not clear. It is not through the law but through the exercises of the will power that the intended beneficiaries of the reform must combat the temptation of the pocket mirror and the deceptive stimulation of the powder rag.—Chicago News.

CULTIVATION OF OPTIMISM.

When the touch of gray in the hair and the crowfeet around the eyes make their first appearance when you are on the wrong side of forty they are apt to cause a very panicky condition of mind.

Almost every one flies to cosmetics, instead of hygiene or mental work, and that is where a woman makes her mistake.

As a matter of fact gray hair or white is really pretty, and when in company with a bright complexion becomes almost beautiful. Besides paint does not cover lines, nor fill in wrinkles, and on withered cheeks accompanied by dull eyes is merely hideous.

The old adage, "A woman is as old as she looks," might with advantage be changed to "A woman is as old as she feels," and then it might be a handy text to hold on to and to work with during the day.

By remembering that your outside appearance comes from inside, you would begin to study to control and banish all those disagreeable thoughts which leave such strong external evidences.

To remain ever young banish from your mind all thoughts of trouble and sorrow, all ugly thoughts. Do not harbor envy, jealousy, revenge or malice. In fact, try to love your neighbor as yourself. You will find in holding happy, healthy and helpful thoughts that the lines and wrinkles with disappear and beauty will reign instead.

Do not give way to feelings of languor and inertia. Keep busy. Do your work, whatever it may be, with vigor and vim.

Don't count your years and say: "Oh, dear, I'm growing old." Rather forget them and say: "I am as young as ever I was."

There is everything nowadays to help a woman to retain her vigor. Baths, electricity, massage and last, but not least, trained mental work, which can not be overrated.

Much benefit is derived from the condition you keep your mind in.

Say to yourself: "I am looking as old as I feel—and I feel like twenty."

Mix with young people, find enjoyment in their pleasures. Try and forget self, and that old self will forget you and pass on.—Indianapolis News.

WHAT WOMEN HAVE DONE.

Miss Jessie Ackerman, a missionary, recently put on a diver's suit in Ceylon, and brought up from the paare, or pearl oyster beds, seven valuable pearls.

Mrs. Peary, during the several Arctic expeditions whereon she accompanied her husband, became an expert and fearless walrus hunter.

The Marchioness of Tweeddale is a good locomotive engineer. She it was who ran the first train over the Forth Bridge.

Joanna Maestrich, of Berlin, was for eight years Oporto's champion bull fighter. The young woman, furthermore, was beautiful. In 1903 she won the first prize at the Lisbon beauty show.

Jenny Carey, of Muckford, Ind., saved from wreck a train containing a party of distinguished Frenchmen, and received from the President of France the medal of the Legion of Honor.

Women disguised as men have often served as soldiers. The following inscription is on a tombstone in an English town of Brighton: "In memory of Phoebe Hassel, born 1713, died 1821, aged 108 years. She served for many years as a private soldier in many parts of Europe, and at the battle of Fontenoy, fighting bravely, she received a bayonet wound in the left arm."—Minneapolis Journal.

WOMAN VIOLIN MAKER.

To play the violin is the accomplishment of hundreds of young women, but few have constructed the beloved instrument from which such wonderful melody can be obtained. Miss Grace Barstow, of San Jose, Cal., has the unique distinction of being the only woman violin maker in America, if not in the world, and moreover, she is a noted performer on the instruments of her own making. Possessing a fitting environment and intelligent sympathy, when her desire to make a violin became known, Miss Barstow's family gave her every encouragement and sent to Germany for the necessary woods. Altogether six violins have been completed by her, each one a noted improvement on the preceding effort, until the last instrument is said by experts to possess a delightfully rich and brilliant tone. Miss Barstow has shown considerable inventive genius in constructing her violins, successfully experimenting with the native redwood as a base bar, and will use more of that wood in her next violin.—Philadelphia

THE LATEST FREAK.

A "black room" is the latest freak of the college girl. The furniture is black Flemish oak, and woodwork, walls, floors and ceiling are all painted black, to correspond. The curtains are black sateen, the table covers black silk, with lace medallions; the wrought iron, and the tea set decorated with black forget-me-nots. The couch is covered with black sateen and heaped with black pillows. All the articles on the dressing table are ebony or black enamel. The bottles are covered with black crepe paper. The writing set on the black table is of black leather. All the volumes in the bookcase are bound in black leather or covered with black paper. The pictures are good copies in black and white, framed in black. In fact, there isn't a thing in the room that deviates a particle from black and white, says the Philadelphia Bulletin.

The effect of this funeral apartment upon the young woman who inhabits it has yet to be seen, but if it does not give her a nightly sense of lying down in her coffin and ultimately drive her to an asylum for the melancholy, she is made of stouter stuff than most of us.

FOR A GIRL TO KNOW.

Some one has suggested a few things that every girl can learn before she is twelve. Not every one can learn to play or sing or paint well enough to give pleasure to her friends, but the following "accomplishments" are within everybody's reach:

Shut the door, and shut it softly.

Keep your own room in tasteful order.

Have an hour for rising, and rise.

Never let a button stay off twenty-four hours.

Always know where your things are.

Never let a day pass without doing something to make somebody comfortable.

Learn to make bread as well as cake.

Never go about with your shoes unbottoned.

FASHION NOTES.

In taffeta petticoats the rage for fancy silks is noticeable. Plaids, checks, brocades, stripes and flowered silk are very popular.

Some of the prettiest of the simple dark silk blouses to wear mornings are made with heart-shaped or square openings at the neck to show white chemisettes.

The best taffeta petticoats are very carefully cut, and have no extra fullness at the waistline. Most women prefer to take out the draw string and fit the skirt smoothly to a buttoned belt.

The Empire and Directory styles ruled in the coats, and there were many long capes and cloaks of charming design.

A simply cut wrap of pale blue broadcloth was cape-shaped, but furnished with large crape-like sleeves.

Skirts are so perfectly fitted these days, especially the circular skirts, that the petticoat becomes of more than ordinary importance in the scheme of dressing.

AN EVIL DAY.

This was the most hateful day Jacky had ever known. Everything had gone wrong. The baby had been particularly aggravating, and no inducement could make him sleep. At last, with satisfied gurglings and little crows, he had settled both chubby hands in Jacky's thick, brown mane, and pulled with all his might. To have one's hair pulled is always peculiarly provoking, but to have it pulled when one is already cross is too much for human endurance. Jacky spanked the baby soundly and then mother came and—well, Jacky had decided life wasn't worth living. She would go away. Father and mother would be glad to get rid of her, mother especially, or she would have considered that one is not responsible for one's conduct when one's hair has all been pulled out by the roots. Jacky almost determined to go to grandfather. She knew he was lonely, and the way he had looked at her once or twice made her sure that his heart, too, was aching for love.

Grandfather was mother's father, but he and mother never even spoke. Mother often cried when grandfather was mentioned, and when Jacky asked questions father said that grandfather had never forgiven mother because she had loved and married him. Jacky was sure grandfather would want her, but mother would not wish her to go to him. Instead, she would run down to the river, climb into the boat, and, pushing far out, would think and think and go just where the river would carry her. So she sped quickly across the meadow to the tiny stream and, unmooring the boat, paddled into the current.

Unkind thoughts weren't easy out there under the tender, blue sky where the willows were crowding the bank and striving to gaze at themselves in the clear water trickling slowly by them. Jacky lay down in the bottom of the boat and gazed at the feathery cloudlets far away in the great blue dome. All was so peaceful that gradually her eyelids drooped and she fell asleep.

Suddenly, startled by rough voices, Jacky sat up. The boat had drifted far down stream and under the shadow of some willows. Peeking through the screens of bushes, Jacky tried to see the speakers. Not more than four rods from her, lying stretched upon the grass, were two men. Both were ragged, unkempt and evil-looking. The one nearest her, a great, coarse, hulking fellow, was speaking.

"I tell ye it's there. I heard the old man tell the housekeeper he must take it to the bank to-morrow. He said it was all the pay for that big, river farm. There must be ten thousand of it, if there's a cent."

"But," the other interposed, "can we get it? Old Windham's allers keeps a gun handy. He ain't a bad shot neither."

The first speaker leaned over excitedly. "I tell ye old Windham thinks nobody knows about it. Though he's quick, he's old. Every afternoon he takes a nap, and wildcats couldn't wake him. The housekeeper is going to town this afternoon, for I heard her tell Jake, the hired man, to hitch up, and the men are all working in the meadow across the river. If the old man wakes up——" the tramp paused and lifted his club suggestively. Jacky drew her breath hard in sudden comprehension. They meant grandfather, and were going to steal his money and, may be, kill him. The next instant she sank back in horrible fear, for one of the men had risen.

"I thought I heard somebody," he whispered.

"Nonsense," his companion exclaimed, roughly. "It was only the wind."

But the first tramp came directly toward the boat, pushing aside the willows. Jacky understood then that her only hope lay in tricking them. She had often played at being asleep, and must play it now to save herself and grandfather. Just then the willows above her parted, and the tramp saw her. Startled, he stepped back and motioned to his companion. Both stood looking at Jacky, and she could hear them whispering. Suddenly one of them leaned down until his cheek almost touched hers, while he listened intently. Her breath came smoothly and evenly. Not a quiver of the features betrayed her. Then the willows sprang back, and she could hear his footsteps retreating. Slow tears crept from under Jacky's lids. If she only dared go for help now! She knew the place. It was only a little way from grandfather's. But she must be sure the tramps had gone before she moved. Besides, they would not go to the house until certain old Hannah was on the way to the village. At last, stealthily, she raised herself and peered through the willows. The men were not in sight. Summoning all her courage, with a little prayer for help, Jacky stole through the woods. When she reached the open she began to run, over the meadows, through the gate, straight into grandfather's arms. Tightly clasping his neck, she gasped out her story, while the bewildered old man held his granddaughter close as though he had always wanted her. When at last he understood, Hannah was quickly dispatched for help and a reception prepared for the tramps.

But those gentlemen never came, having in some way found their plot was discovered. Late in the afternoon Mr. Windham took Jacky home; and, when all was told, with one arm around his daughter and Jacky, he held out his free hand to his son-in-law, blessing, while tears rolled down his face, Jacky's courage and Jacky's evil day, which had at last dispersed the cloud of misunderstanding and given them all to each other again.—Mabel L. Sherburne, in the Tribune Farmer.

FUN WITH A LAMP.

Take an ordinary knitting-needle, and stick one end of it into a cork. Holding it by the cork so as not to burn your fingers, thrust the other end into the flame of an alcohol lamp, and keep it there until it is heated to redness. Dip the red hot needle into cold water, and when it is cool, thrust it again into the flame. If you watch it now you will see that it changes color curiously, turning first yellow, then orange, then crimson, violet, blue, and finally gray.

The reason is that a film of rust forms on the needle, and this alters its color as it grows gradually thicker.

This is a matter of great importance in tempering steel, for the changes in color are watched carefully, as the kind of steel depends on the time when it is taken from the fire and cooled. For instance, if you take the needle from the flame, and cool it when it is yellow, it will be much harder than if left in the flame until blue, and then cooled.

This is shown in the steel pins that are commonly used. The blue steel ones are likely to snap in two with the least pressure; whereas, those that are tempered yellow are much stronger.

While you have your alcohol lamp burning, take a piece of metallic tin—not tinplate—and place it on an ordinary playing card, first turning up the edges of the card, forming a sort of box-lid. Hold the card containing the tin over the flame, and the card will not burn, but the tin may be melted thus.

The reason is that the tin is so good a conductor of heat that it carries it away before the card has time to burn.

Now take a copper wire, an iron wire, and a glass tube, and dip each of them into melted wax so as to form a coating on them. After they are dry, lay them on a table, with the ends projecting about two inches over the edge, and crossing each other. Under the place where they cross hold the flame of the alcohol lamp, so as to heat them equally.

You can tell which is the best conductor of heat by the way the wax melts, that on the best conductor melting first. But there will be a point where the wax does not melt at all, because the heat will be conducted off into the air before reaching that point on the rod. On the good conductor, however, the wax will be melted much farther than on a poor conductor.

Take an iron rod, and on its lower surface stick small wooden balls or bullets, by means of wax. Hold one end of the rod in the alcohol lamp flame, and as the wax melts, the balls will fall to the floor beginning with those nearest the flame.—New York Evening Mail.

Vast Salaries of Kings and Queens.

The Kaiser receives $3,925,000 a year as King of Prussia, but nothing as Emperor of Germany. Besides this he has an enormous private income, derived from mines, fisheries and estates, of which he owns more than any other man in Prussia. The King of Bavaria receives $1,350,000 a year; the King of Saxony, $875,000; the Grand Duke of Baden, $400,000. The Czar of Russia is paid $6,750,000 for his private use, while each Grand Duke receives $1,000,000 a year. In addition to these enormous salaries each of these rulers has a large income from royalties and perquisites of many kinds, of which few outsiders know anything.—New York World.

NAMES FOR COUNTRY HOUSES

A FASHION THAT IS GROWING IN POPULARITY.

Scope for the Exercise of Wit in the Selection of a Suitable Name—Hidden Meanings of Titles—Sentimental Element Has Disappeared—Old English Endings.

Naming one's country home is a much more important matter than one who has never taken it up would be likely to suppose. It is not customary here, as it is in England, to call every detached villa by some sentimental title; but the fashion of giving a name to one's home in the country or in some suburban town near New York grows more popular every day.

The house's name may be pregnant with hidden meaning to those who have the secret. There are few people who know that Elberon is called after the New York lawyer who bought the land and started the new town. It is by such combinations that the house name may be made to hold hidden significance.

The deeper beauties of a name like Wilberth are recognizable only when one knows that William and Bertha are the names of the man and wife who own it. Richmar, the name of a home on the Sound, is of similar origin. Of course Georgian Court is called for the senior Gould, who owns it.

Nobody would suspect the origin of Nearston, a really imposing pile that crowns a Westchester hill and commands a view of miles along the Sound and over the Palisades.

The house is built of blocks of concrete, which are almost an exact imitation of stone. It seems so near stone that the owner, who has a sense of humor, gave his home the appropriate name quoted.

This is the type of name most popular nowadays, although some suggestion of the earlier history of the place appeals to many. The result is the large number of establishments with Indian names that have recently come into existence, such as "Agulhung," which is the name of a place at Rye and comes from an old Indian tribe who formerly lived in that region.

The French names, such as "Mon Desir," "Mon Plasir," "Bonne Terre," "Belle Air," once so fashionable, have all but disappeared. So have the intensely sentimental names usually derived from some floral combination such as "Petunia Dell." "Lily Mead," "Blossomdale," "Clovernook."

Such names as "The Oaks," "The Willows," "Cedarcrest," and "The Chestnuts" got a black eye from the fact that the kind of trees after which the estates are named are usually rarest in the region. That fact has served to make householders very suspicious of any house named in such a way and the genus has consequently gone out of fashion.

"Mostly Hall" is the name of a house down at Shinnecocks. The owner named it so because, he said, the architect had left him nothing but hall by the time he finished.

"The Cables," "White Towers" and "The Chimneys" are other names based on architectural features. The geological incidents of a place also furnish good names, such as "Stonecliff," "Ridgetop" and "Rockledge." These peculiarities are not likely to disappear.

A woman who called her country place "Fern Meadows," because half an acre of ground was sparsely covered with sharp and rather rusty looking ferns, was never able to make the ferns grow after she had been in the place a year. But her die had been made, her stationary printed and there was nothing to do but cling to the name.

Nothing is more the style just now than the use of the old English terminations along with something to suggest the family, even if the name itself is not used. "Croft," "dene," "mead," "holme," "cote," "hurst," "leigh"—these are some of the terminations combined with family names. "Croft" means a small field near a house of a very small farm. "Mead" comes from the old Anglo-Saxon word "maed," which has its modern equivalent in meadow. "Holme" means either the low flat land by a river or an island and is Anglo-Saxon. "Leigh" is the same as lea, which means an untitled field.

"Hurst" means a grove and "dene" a dell or even a dune, which happens to be something quite different. But their common root is the same. "Fields" is also a popular termination nowadays for a house name that begins with the family's name.

"Honerhurst" is the name of a home in Connecticut owned by the family whose croft," "Sheroote"—cote means a cottage or a sheepfold—is the name of the country estate owned by a family named Shearman. Three examples of this same way of identifying the country home are "Bellholme," "Mooremead" and "Greenfields."

There are nowadays many "halls" and "manors," and "house" has lately become very common. The great trouble with the last word is the suggestion of a hotel or, perhaps, even a boarding house.

But many of the handsomest places near the city are nevertheless designated in that way. "Crosby House" sounds a little like a hotel, and yet it suggests "Hatfield House" and other places of equal fame.

"Court" is a termination limited by the grandeur of the establishment to which it is applied. Nobody would ever think of calling any home a court unless it were really magnificent. "Ochre Court" and "Georgian Court" are good illustrations of this. "Manor" and "hall" are also a bit pretentious, although that does not seem to have occurred to the musician who named his modest cottage "Melody Manor." He was just as indifferent to public opinion and as fond of alliteration as the pianist who calls his home, which is two stories high and built of logs, "Harmony Hall."—New York Sun.

A GLIMPSE OF ARCADY.

Being Jack London's Pen Picture of a Canon in the Sierras.

It was the green heart of the canon, where the walls swerved back from the rigid plan and relieved their harshness of line by making a little sheltered nook and filling it to the brim with sweetness and roundness and softness. Here all things rested. Even the narrow stream ceased its turbulent down-rush long enough to form a quiet pool. Knee-deep in the water, with drooping head and half-shut eyes, drowsed a red-coated, many-antlered buck.

On one side, beginning at the very lip of the pool, was a tiny meadow, a cool, resilient surface of green that extended to the base of the frowning wall. Across the pool a gentle slope of earth ran up and up to meet the opposing wall. Fine grass covered the slope—grass that was spangled with flowers, with here and there patches of color, orange and purple and golden. Below the canon was shut in. There was no view. The walls leaned together abruptly and the canon ended in a chaos of rocks, moss-covered and hidden by a green screen of vines and creepers and boughs of trees. Up the canon rose far hills and peaks, the big foothills, pine-covered and remote. And far beyond, like clouds upon the border of the sky, towered minarets of white, where the Sierra's eternal snows finished austerely the blazes of the sun.

There was no dust in the canon. The leaves and flowers were clean and virginal. The grass was young velvet. Over the pool three cottonwoods sent their snowy fluffs fluttering down the quiet air. On the slope the blossoms of the wine-wooded manzanita filled the air with springtime odors, while the leaves, wise with experience, were already beginning their vertical twist against the coming aridity of summer. In the open spaces on the slope, beyond the farthest shadow-reach of the manzanita, poised the mariposa lilies, like so many flights of jeweled moths suddenly arrested and on the verge of trembling into flight again. Here and there that woods harlequin, the madrone, permitting itself to be caught in the act of changing its pea-green trunk to madder red, breathed its fragrance into the air from great clusters of waxen bells. Creamy white were these bells, shaped like lilies of the valley, with the sweetness of perfume that is of the springtime.

There was not a sigh of wind. The air was drowsy with its weight of perfume. It was a sweetness that would have been cloying had the air been heavy and humid. But the air was sharp and thin. It was as starlight transmuted into atmosphere, shot through and warmed by sunshine, and flower-drenched with sweetness.

An occasional butterfly drifted in and out through the patches of light and shade. And from over all rose the low and sleepy hum of mountain bees—feasting Sybarites that jostled one another good-naturedly at the board, nor found time for rough discourtesy. Quietly did the little stream drip and ripple its way through the canon that it spoke only in faint and occasional gurgles. The voice of the stream was as a drowsy whisper, ever interrupted by dozings and silences, ever lifted again in the awakenings.

The motion of all things was a drifting in the heart of the canon. Sunshine and butterflies drifted in and out among the trees. The hum of the bees and the whisper of the stream were a drifting of sound. And the drifting sound and drifting color seemed to weave together in the making of a delicate and intangible fabric which was the spirit of the place. It was a spirit of peace that was not of death, but of smooth-pulsing life, of quietude that was not silence, of movement that was not action, of repose that was quick with existence without being violent with struggle and travail. The spirit of the place was the spirit of the peace of the living, somnolent with the easement and content of prosperity, and undisturbed by rumors of far wars.—From Jack London's "All Gold Canon" in the Century.

India's Population.

India—that is, the British India and the native states under British influence—is 1,766,597 square miles in extent, and has a total population of 294,000,000, or nearly 41,000,000 more than it had twenty years ago.

The largest dinner ever given assembled at Paris a few days ago. The Mutualists of France dined at the Galerie des Machines. About 50,000 sat down together.

NOTES AND COMMENTS.

Eternal vigilance, declares the Atlantic Constitution, on the part of the private citizen is the price of public freedom from graft and political bossism.

It is hoped the Mikado in communing with the spirits of his honorable ancestors yesterday, did not disparage the part taken by Togo, Oyama, Nogi, Kuroki, Oku and the others says the Kansas City Star.

The Dallas News thinks that if the Czar had not treated his subjects like they were a lot of policy holders, all this trouble might not have come about.

Possibly the Norwegians voted for monarchy because a majority of the Norwegian Republicans have immigrated to the United States, suggests the Louisville Courier-Journal.

Our largest battleships have a displacement of 12,500 tons, engines of 16,000 horse-power, and a speed of 18 knots. Some of the British battleships are 18½ knot vessels of 16,350 tons, and some of the French and German battleships range up to 14,000 tons.

Fashion, says the Tailor and Cutter, may be changed, corrected, educated, but neither ridicule nor reasoning, nor abuse can destroy it, nor can church, satirist, or cynic turn it aside any more than the whistling of a schoolboy can shift the direction of the wind. After this poem, how hard it is to sympathize with Ivan Harrington's distinction to the realm of tailordom, declares the Boston Transcript.

It may be admitted that "King Haakon" sounds more rugged, Vikingesque and impressive than a commonplace "King Charles," and so his majesty of Norway may be right in changing his name; but see how far it sets him back in the progress of the world, remarks the Philadelphia Inquirer.

For some months past there has been a noticeable diminution in the porportion of filthy bank notes in circulation, says the New York Medical Record. This is undoubtedly due to a growing popular aversion to such notes, and we are glad to be told that increased facilities for their redemption are to be supplied. Let the people keep on demanding redemption if they wish to avoid the danger—and certainly it is a real danger—of contracting disease from the circulating medium.

There are not wanting learned investigators among the ruins of Egypt and buried cities in that and other desert lands, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, who attributes to the destruction of the quail and other birds the great transition, which gradually eliminated the forests and enabled the sands of the desert to overwhelm once populous cities and fruitful fields.

Good marksmanship is put by Lord Charles Beresford in the first rank of naval requisites. On the Trafalgar Centenary he held a land review of 3,000 seamen and marines at Malta, in the procession the gunlayers lead, next the engine-room artificers, and after them artisans and signalmen. This is the first time in the history of the British Navy that the gunlayers have been recognized as the most important body of men in the fleet.

With our iron production booming, with our lumber production booming, with our farm products of all kinds booming, with our national banks, State banks, sayings banks and all our conservatively and honestly managed financial institutions booming, with our export trade booming as far as the efforts we put into it allow it to boom, with our East, our West and our South each trying to help the other, with our factories booming as they never boomed before, with our schools crowded to the doors with 21,000,000 American children, native and adopted, in training for American citizenship; with the public conscience, political, social, financial and religious, awakened as it was never awakened before; with the "Rogues' Gallery" being stocked over political Bosses and grafters of every size, shape and hue, have we not every reason in the world to congratulate the United States?

Football undoubtedly can, and it begins to look as if it would be reformed, but what then asks the Indianapolis News. Few people attend tennis tournaments, and chess is comparatively unattractive. In summer time, of course, we do go to the baseball game by the thousands; but it must be remembered that there is not only always a chance for a player to be seriously injured, but, more than that—immeasurably more than that!—there is the umpire. In the umpire always lie vast possibilities for riotous pleasure and excitement, even sometimes to the extent of a hurry up wagonload of police reserves. So, after all, baseball is not so far behind football as an attraction, and is probably all we can stand during the enervating seas in which it is played. But when the bracing breezes of autumn come will the safe and sane be sufficient. Aye, will it? The treasuries of the football associations testify to how well we are satisfied with existing conditions, and whether this be to our credit or our discredit, it testifies that we are not weaklings—by proxy, anyhow.

TAPIOCA CREAM.

Three tablespoonfuls tapioca, soaked in a teacup of water over night; add one quart of milk; stir together and boil twenty minutes. Beat the yolks of three eggs and one cup sugar thoroughly; stir into the milk; flavor with vanilla. Beat the whites very stiff, put in the bottom of the dish and pour the rest over it. Serve cold.

SCOTCH SHORT CAKE.

Take one-half pound of slightly salted butter, and one pound flour, then mix flour and butter with hands; then add four ounces of loaf sugar, and work all into a smooth ball; then roll out until it is an inch thick; prick over with a fork, and pinch round the edges, and bake for half an hour in oven, and with a moderate fire, in a round or square tin, according to taste.

CHOPPED TOMATOES.

To one gallon of tomatoes, chopped fine, take one teacupful of salt; sprinkle and let stand over night; drain through a colander, then add one tablespoonful of ground cloves, one of allspice, two of cinnamon, three of ground mustard, two of black pepper, chopped fine, one head of cabbage; cover with cold vinegar; three or four onions, if liked.

PLUM PUDDING.

One pound flour, one pound currants, one pound sugar, one pound raisins, one pound suet, chopped fine; one-fourth pound candied lemon peel, one teaspoonful baking powder, one nutmeg grated, a little cinnamon. Sift the flour, baking powder and a little salt separately, then mix all together, the fruit, sugar, lemon peel, nutmeg cinnamon. When well mixed add sufficient water (cold), or milk, to make a batter just thick enough to spoon into the bag; leave room in the bag for it to raise. Cover closely and boil from four to six hours.

ENGLISH PLUM PUDDING

Take one pound of seedless raisins, one pound currants, one pound of the best beef suet chopped as fine as possible, one-half pound flour, sifted, and one teaspoon of baking powder, two eggs, well beaten; two ounces of citron, chopped fine, or two ounces almond nuts, one-half pint milk. Mix this all thoroughly to a nice batter, put in pudding bag and boil for four hours. For pudding sauce: One pint cream, one tablespoon cornstarch and one egg. Cornstarch and egg must be well mixed before adding cream. Put this on stove to thicken, stirring constantly, add any desired flavor.

DELICIOUS CORN BREAD.

This is the famous corn bread of which we hear so much, and which has a place even among the poorest of Southern people. Prepare one pint of blended corn meal and wheat flour in the proportion of one-third corn and two-thirds wheat. Beat three eggs until light and whip into them one tablespoonful of sugar. Then add butter the size of an egg, which has been softened but not melted, and one pint of sweet milk. Stir the whole gradually into the flour, and when all has been added beat vigorously for several minutes. Finally add two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Pour into greased sponge-cake pans and bake in a moderate oven, then cut in squares or half slices.

TOMATO PELAFF.

Take any remains of cold beef and cut into small square pieces. Fry these lightly in butter and place in a double boiler with enough good tomato sauce to cover, with pepper and salt to taste. Simmer for two hours. Take three ounces of rice, pour over it three-quarters of a pint of stock, and a tablespoonful of tomato puree. Cook till the rice is quite tender and the grains are separate, and should there be any superfluous stock, strain it away. Melt one ounce of butter in a stew pan, when it nearly boils, stir in the rice and set at the side of the fire to simmer for a quarter of an hour. Make the rice into a circle on an entree dish, and in the centre place the meat, garnished with croutons of fried bread.

USEFUL HINTS.

A good way to keep silver bright that is in daily use is to place it in hot borax water occasionally and allow it to stand an hour or two; rinse with clear, hot water, and then wipe with a clean, dry towel.

"Many people," a physician remarks, "avoid drinking water as though it were poison, although without it on one can be properly healthy. When taken early in the morning it has a cleansing and bracing effect on the system, while its beneficial effects on the liver can hardly be exaggerated."

OUR STATE CHAIRMAN.

The leading papers of our State had a good deal to say last week about Judge L. H. Reynolds in connection with the chairmanship of the Republican State Committee. Well, we don't know whether he would take it or not, for there is a heap of hard work to be done if the position is filled as it should be, and Judge Reynolds is a pretty busy man already. We haven't any fault to find with Hon. J. O. Thompson since he has been chairman, but many things to commend; but, if there is to be a change, we know of no man better fitted for the position than Judge Reynolds. He has many qualifications for the position that should strongly appeal to every true Republican in Alabama. He has been the victor in the battle with the Democratic party more often than any other man in our State. He has represented Chilton county in the Legislature several times; was a delegate to the constitutional convention; was elected to the State Senate, but was deprived of his seat by the most bare-faced fraud ever perpetrated (even in Alabama), and is now our Probate Judge. He has never been defeated. It is time for the Republican party of Alabama to be a party of voters, not just a party to hold the various federal offices in the State. If Judge Reynolds should be made chairman, we feel assured he will build up the party and bring all Populists and dissatisfied Democrats into the fold of the Party of Progress and Prosperity. He has great ability as an organizer, and does not know such a word as fail. In his fight for State Senator he was almost alone in his canvass, but the voters were with him at the ballot box. Judge Reynolds has proved himself to be a power in politics; he has made himself what he is, having attained his present position by dint of sheer hard work, which earned him the suffrages of the people who know him best. If he is made chairman, we know he would be fair to all, knowing no faction, but he would look after the welfare of the voters, the "Hill Billies" and "Rosum Chawers," those people that never "bowed the knee to Baal;" and would make our portals the goal of the honest voters, who are disgusted with the "dummers" of the Demo- [illegible] In conclu- [illegible] Bingham, belief that Chilton county is entitled to recognition for her steadfast adherence to the cause of the people; she has never been "redeemed," as the Democratic rainbow chasers of our county put it, and, by the grace of God, never will be.

WHERE HE STANDS.

Clanton, Ala., Dec. 22, 1905.

Editor Union:

For some time past I have been receiving a number of inquiries from my friends concerning certain rumors as to my politics. I haven't the time to answer all these inquiries specially, but will say, for the information of those interested, that I am standing today exactly where I have been for the last six or eight months—squarely in the Republican party, the Party of Progress and Prosperity. Pressure of business and other matters prevent me, at this time, from discussing the issues with which the people will soon be confronted, but later on, and at the proper time, I expect to have more to say, both through your paper and from the stump. Respectfully,

J. OSMOND MIDDLETON.

ABOUT STOCK LAW.

I have been asked so many times about what must be done to get an election on stock law that I've made up my mind to ask for space in The Union and explain what is necessary, and so save much correspondence. The first thing to be done, a majority of the freeholders in a precinct must sign a petition to the County Commissioners asking for an election, and then the court must call the election, in not less than forty nor more than ninety days. I've been asked "if more than one beat could hold an election at one time." I will say they can; the whole county could vote at the same time; but no less territory than one beat can vote or have stock law. All qualified electors can vote at such an election. If the petition describes certain kinds of stock, and obtains a majority of votes at the election, it will be lawful for such stock to run at large. The election must be held between the 1st day of December and the 1st day of March, and if stock law carries it goes into effect in six months. I have been asked "if those living in incorporated towns could vote at such election." Section 5 reads as follows: "All qualified electors shall be entitled to vote at such lection, and none others." Respectfully,

L. H. REYNOLDS.

TO THE VOTERS OF CHILTON.

As you all know, the time for paying poll tax will soon be closed. After February 1 no one that has not paid can vote at any election that may be held in the year 1906. If you pay next October you cannot vote until the year 1907. Just think, what a terrible condition a man gets into when he is disfranchised. It makes no difference what might come up, that disfranchised man could not take part in any election. Just look what is ahead of the voters this coming year of 1906; there is an election called for February 6 to vote on the special school tax. Then a road law is talked of, and there are petitions being circulated asking for a vote on the stock law question. Also there will be a general election on November 6, at which this county will have to elect a Sheriff, Representative and two Commissioners; also vote for State officers and a member of Congress. There is no excuse now for any one on the money question, for though the Democrats made this law, hoping the farmers would disfranchise themselves, the Republican party has made times so good that you all have money. Now, if you are behind with your poll tax, pay it up, and if there is any man that hasn't the money, let him go and borrow it. Every man in Chilton should pay his poll tax. Every cent you pay for this tax goes direct to your school in your district, for the benefit of your children. If some few of you haven't any children yet, pay up for the sake of your next door neighbor's children. Remember you must do this before February 1, 1906. Respectfully, tf L. H. REYNOLDS.

CALERA.

The holiday trade was better than for many years. Cotton has brought a fair price and the farmers were in shape to gratify their real and imaginary wants. Fine, cool weather for saving meat, and many people have taken advantage of it. J. T. Littleton, of Jemison, has moved to Calera with his family, and will soon have his mill and gin in operation. Moving to Calera has been quite brisk the past two weeks. The good people of our city have been very generous in remembrance of the few poor that we have. Dave Mullins, of Chilton, has been here again, and bought another farm, adjoining the one recently purchased of Asbury Leonard. On January 19 the U. C. V. here will have a meeting, at which time a representative of Birmingham Chapter, U. D. C., will be present and confer crosses of honor upon fourteen members of the camp. Let those who have made application for crosses be promptly at camp headquarters at 10 a. m. Appropriate services will be held—music, recitations and an address by Hon. A. M. Garber, of Talladega. The new pastor of the Cumberland Presbyterian Church will preach his first sermon Sunday next. Mrs. Oscar Pilgreen presented her husband with a fine girl Christmas. A happy New Year to the editor and readers of The Union from

THORSBY.

There are so many land-seekers in town that it is impossible to keep track of all their names. The Thorsby Inn has been crowded for some time. The entertainment given by the public school on last Friday night was enjoyed by all present. Misses Denman, Fay and Gallagher have gone to their homes for the Christmas holidays. Mr. and Mrs. Neal are visiting with relatives in Decatur. Miss Maud Gerald has returned to Thorsby after having spent seven pleasant months in the North and West. Among the visitors in town during Christmas we noticed the following: Mr. Monroe Burnett and wife, Mr. Hill and wife, Mr. Robinson, the two Mr. Sorrels, Miss Hulda Forsman and J. O. Johnson, who was accompanied by Mr. Young and daughter from Anniston. The Union, Swedish and Norwegian Sunday schools all gave delightful Christmas entertainments in their respective churches. A happy and prosperous New Year to all Union readers. NEMO.

ARAINT NONSENSE.

If you saw a pink pug puppy playing ping pong with a pig,
Or a great gray goose a-golfing with a goat,
Would you think it as funny as a big, brown Belgian bunny
Blowing bubbles with a bishop in a boat?

If a gormandizing gobbler gobbles goobers by the gross,
Which he pilfered from a peanut peddler's pack,
Could he earn his absolution by an act of restitution
If he gave the Dago man his full crop back?

If a singing stegomyia stung a Jap upon the jaw
And injected venomed virus in his veins,
Would the microbe not prove sterile, since each one's a Yellow Peril,
If the homeopathic theory obtains?

If a gentle jokesmith jabbers nutty nonsense in a way
That causes you brain softening to dread,
Would you send him to a college where they try to hammer knowledge
Into people that are foolish in the head?

—Cleveland Leader.

A Navajo Vice.

The Navajo is an inveterate gambler. Not only are there the professionals, who live entirely by the practice, but even the small boys are gamesters and adapt the pictorial Sunday-school cards to gaming purposes. Their blankets illustrate gambling, and even their account of the creation must have woven into it the story of a game. Thus a serious and apparently native vice of formidable proportions at once confronts the teacher and the missionary. The question of the best way to overcome it is still an open one. The prohibition of its practice does not go to the root of the matter, and all our logic fails to convince the Indian that he has not as great a right to play for stakes as he has to breathe.—Southern Workman.

Harvard Lectures in Berlin.

Professor Peabody's lectures in Berlin University, at Berlin, Germany, have turned out rather a failure. He is the eminent Harvard professor who is over there in fulfillment of the Kaiser's desire that there should be some exchange of lectures between German and American university luminaries. His first address the other day, when the Kaiser attended, drew a full house, and his second lecture was a fiasco, about ninety students, mostly Americans, being present. His subject was "Social Ethics," a subject, say German students, on which "the United States can teach us nothing we don't know." Besides Professor Peabody's lectures are in English.—London Chronicle

What Hurts Worst

A man once called me a terrible name,
And uttered a fearful curse;
And I cannot say it, for very shame
To blacken therewith my verse.
The curse it stung life a withering flame,
But the shame of the name was worse!

On the fire of my rage like a wind it blew,
As only a foul name can;
And my smoldering hatred lived anew
As straight at his throat I ran—
And may nobody ever do to you
What I did to that wretched man!

But still for peace I may vainly call,
As the souls in torment do,
For the blight remains, and as bitter as gall
Is the thought that pierces me through—
"He is dead and done for good and all,
But the name that he named—was true."

THE AWAKENING

BY HELEN PALMER

(Copyright 1905 by Daily Story Pub. Co.)

"Are you sure you don't want one of us to stay with you, Gwen?" asked Lily Marsh, anxiously, "I'm sure I should be frightened stiff at the idea of staying here alone all night."

"Nonsense!" declared Gwen, "why should anyone be afraid? The house is burglar-proof—father saw to that, for mother was almost as afraid of a country house as she is now of a yacht. Besides haven't you just been over the whole ranch? I believe Lily even looked into the range ovens in the ardor of her search for a possible man. I'm a thousand times obliged; and now go home—all of you; and sleep the sleep of the night after the ball. We had a lovely time at Mrs. Opie's, didn't we?"

"Lovely!" echoed the high voices of the girls, as they fluttered down the broad steps like a flock of white-plumaged birds. The men, gathered in a dark bunch on the terrace, were lighted up for an instant by the blue spurt of a match that passed from hand to hand. One of them stepped out into the path of light that streamed from the open door and waved a last good-night.

The house seemed very still when the gay voices were shut out. Half way up the broad stairway Gwen stopped on the landing and kneeling in the deep window seat watched the group of men and girls separating into twos as they crossed the lawn, and scattered homeward. All but Graham—she noted—he started straight down the hill alone. The clock in the hall struck two; the dance had kept up later than was usual among the conservative cottagers. Gwen yawned sleepily and started up the second flight, but stopped suddenly to ask herself whether she had certainly locked the front door and put the chain on. Yes, she was sure she had, and Graham had seen that the windows were all bolted securely. If Graham wasn't afraid to have her stay there alone, it must be all right, she decided. Graham had such a lovely way of looking out for her and yet never making it apparent. She liked that reserve, even though their engagement was announced.

Her own room looked pleasantly home-like after the wide, echoing corridors, and Gwen confessed to herself that though she wasn't afraid, she should never again be beguiled into allowing all the servants to go into town at once, even if the occasion was the wedding of the parlor maid and the butler. "Father and mother would be wild, if they knew," she acknowledged, guiltily. But presently the thought of Graham drove everything else from her mind. He had seemed worried and preoccupied all the evening, she thought, and he had repelled her efforts to penetrate and share his trouble. If he had a fault, it was the conviction that she must be spared all pain. It was generous and brave in him, but she must make him understand that she did not wish to be spared, that she would far rather be trusted. "Dear Graham, dear boy!"

"Nonsense!" declared Gwen; "why should any one be afraid?"

she murmured, and with his face floating before her dreaming eyes, she fell asleep.

She woke with a shuddering start; there was someone in the room. In the grey light that faintly whitened the windows, she saw a man bending over her dressing table. She must have cried out unconsciously, for on the instant he whirled to face her. His hands were full of jewels that gleamed and glistened as he moved, but when he met her eyes he let them fall scattering to the ground, and covering his face, he groaned aloud.

"Graham!" she whispered. "What is the [illegible]" [illegible] was trembling still, [illegible]rawing around her [illegible]ingha[illegible]. She must not be frightened with Graham there, she told herself. But how did he get in? And why had he gathered up her jewels? Would he never speak? "Graham!" she faltered, "Graham, what is it?"

"Don't ask me," he broke out suddenly, throwing himself into a chair and turning his face away. "Can't you see for yourself? I thought you'd sleep through it; you never stirred when I came in." He spoke almost with resentment, and as she only stared, silent, leaning forward, he went on. "You saw what I had in my hands?"

"Yes," she whispered, "but why? why?"

"Why?" he repeated, hoarsely. He made a sudden movement and his foot struck a ring that rolled flashing out of sight. "Why does anyone want the accursed things?" he went on, recoiling, "Because they mean money—money that one has to have—or die!"

"God knows I'm not fit!"

She drew back, her eyes dropped and her cheeks flamed scarlet. "You mean?" she whispered piteously.

"Yes. I suppose I could lie to you, but I won't," he went on doggedly. "I've been almost wild lately—I've wondered sometimes you didn't see it—debts, big debts, debts I couldn't hope to pay. And men harrying me week in, week out." And last night when we came in here and I saw those diamonds and that string of pearls lying there—enough to pay all my debts twice over—I couldn't help seeing in a flash how easy it would be for me to take them. I left a window unfastened; I went straight home and came back on a wheel. I thought I should get away without waking you and a 'burglar' would be the natural explanation of the theft. That's all. It's a pretty tale, isn't it? Now what shall I do?" he added abruptly, "Stay or go?"

"Oh, Graham! Graham!" she moaned, I would have given them to you. You know I would."

"You couldn't," he said, stubbornly, "and I couldn't have taken them if you had. Shall I go now?" he repeated, rising nervously.

"Pick them up!" the girl commanded in a grave whisper, pointing to the scattered jewels. He gathered them up silently and laid them in her outstretched palms.

"Did you get them all?" she questioned, scanning the glittering heap. "There was a ruby clasp in the box."

"I think I was thorough," he answered grimly. "If it's worth anything it's there."

"Oh, Graham! Oh, my poor boy!" she wailed. But in a moment controlling herself, she lifted her hands with their rich burden and stretched them toward him. "Perhaps you are right," she said gently, "I couldn't have given them to you before—but I can now. Take them!" she pleaded, bending nearer, "I'm so glad I've got them!"

"No, Gwen, I can't," he said, drawing back, "I can't."

"And yet you are going to take me!" she whispered, mustering a pale smile to her aid.

"No, Gwen, no! I can't! I can't!" he cried, hoarsely, sinking to his knees beside the bed and hiding his face. "I can't take you! God knows I'm not fit! I'll go away. Perhaps after I've cleaned off my score—perhaps—Good-bye! Good-bye!" He pressed his lips to the hem of the filmy spread that was wet with his tears and dashed from the room.

"Graham! Graham!" she cried, desperately, but there was no answer, only a hurrying step on the terrace and the whirr of a bicycle speeding down the long hill.

THE AUTO THAT WAS LONELY.

Sought and Found Many Comrades in Misfortune.

An automobile that had broken down was standing disconsolately by the wayside shedding great gasoline tears at its own forlorn state, when another automobile came up, and, seeing the condition of its brother, asked if it could do anything.

"Yes," replied the miserable one, "please tow me home."

So the other put out a rope and pulled and pulled. But the strain was too great, and in a short time the friendly auto had also broken down and was unable to proceed.

Pretty soon a third auto came along. It was immediately hailed by the two unfortunates.

"Oh, brother, tow us home!"

So the third auto put out a rope. But alas! In a few moments he, too, had broken down, and there was nothing to do but lament his lot with the rest.

Other automobiles continued to come up, and as they did, each one shared the fate of the rest. Finally there were so many of them stalled that no one could pass, and the first auto, the one that had caused all the trouble, having been promptly repaired by a man from a garage who had been sent for, had to go back the way it came, saying blithely as it went off:

"Farewell, brothers, sorry to have detained you, but I was lonesome."

NEW IDEA OF JULIUS CAESAR.

How the Young Mind Views Him—An Awful Tragedy.

The following remarkable appreciation of Julius Caesar is pieced together without change of phrase or spelling from several examination papers lately presented at an academy in Pennsylvania, according to the Atlantic:

Caesar is a tragedy of blood. The piece about Shylock was almost bloody but the knife didn't reach the breat of him. Caesar wanted to be a tyrant, but he did not want any crowns on his head so he refused them in broad daylight. He grew so big that he could straddle the world, which scared indeed his men who were his enemies.

They came together one night when lions were rained down without chains in the streets of Italy, and when red lightenings were running this way and that. They were all there but Brutus who was the honorablest of all the men when Caesar lived those days. Cassium and Cascade were much in the things. Then they threw through the windows of Brutuses' orchard handing characters which made the heart of Brutus burn fierce over the dark state of the people's rights among the citizens of Rome.

I pities Brutus then as he read with tears falling about how he was noble and about how Caesar was hard on the poor. Then he called his wife and sharpened up his blade and told her not to eat any fire that day as he could not fail to win the fight. But she ate the fire after jagging herself.

The Senses of the Word.

"She is a lady in every sense of the word," exclaimed Blifkins.

"Then she is the most remarkable woman that ever lived," replied Johnson.

"What do you mean? Aren't there plenty of ladies in the world?"

"Yes; but not in every sense of the word. For instance, if the woman is what you say, she is not only a woman of good family or of good breeding and refinement, but she is also, according to the Century dictionary, 'a sweetheart (local United States); a slate measuring about sixteen inches broad by ten long; the calcareous apparatus in the cardiac part of the stomach of the lobster, the function of which is the trituration of food.' And if she is all that, her fortune is made in the museum line."

After that it was noted that Blifkins usually pruned down the remark to "she is a lady," simply.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Envy.

On a poor little two-by-four paper
Was a fellow whose favorite caper
Was to viciously throw it
Into every poet
Who ever put pencil to paper.

"I once issued a volume of verses!"
He shrieked, then, between his curses,
"It fell flat as a fritter!
That's why I am bitter
Against every writer of verses!"

Oh, prince, if your fancy is rhyming,
When the bells of success are a-chiming
You will hear loud and bitter
The wails of the critter
Whose mismated feet stopped his climbing.

In every wide field of endeavor
The climber will stumble forever
O'er obstacles bitter
Put there by the quitter;
There's no crime like just being "more clever."

"Cy" Silloway Would Dig 'Em Up.

"Cy" Silloway, the tall New Hampshire congressman, was visiting a friend who was making extensive improvements on his estate in Dover, when the following incident occurred:

There was a scarcity of sand and loam, which was needed to fill in an excavation, and his host asked the congressman:

"What shall I use to fill that hole?"

"Oh, if you haven't the dirt, fill in with some of these diggers, and cover them deep," answered "Cy."

"Yes," spoke up one of the diggers, "an', begorra, nixt election time ye'll be 'round diggin' us up."

Old Chimes Ring Again.

Unheard for nearly 250 years, the old "Turn Again, Whittington" chimes were rung once more, at noon, Oct. 11, from the steeple of Bow church, London. The old chime, destroyed in the great fire of 1666, has been recast by Sir Charles Villiers Stanford.

NATIVE NEW YORKERS SCARCE.

About One Out of Every Ten in the City Population.

Now that thirty "emergency" census takers finished the tail end of their work a few days ago we may soon have light on an interesting question that this enumeration will throw some light upon. Out of Gotham's 4,000,000 souls how many are actual New Yorkers—persons born in this city? Taking the last federal census as a criterion there is about one "native born" New Yorker out of every ten in population. Still, even this small balm to Knickerbocker families—390,000—persons—has to be greatly reduced, for in it is included every person of whom no actual knowledge could be obtained of whom the haste of the census tempted to throw under this general heading. Amateur statisticians have decided that there are about 120,000 citizens of New York who have been born of parents natives of this country. These delvers in the census results are of the opinion that if the qualification were that both their parents were natives of this country not more than 5,000 persons could qualify as New Yorkers of the second American generation. Children of parents who were born abroad numbered 1,375,000 in the last federal census. There were then more than 400,000 Americans here who were born in other states, New York state leading with a contribution of 125,000 and New Jersey following with 56,000; 36,000 were born in Pennsylvania, 25,000 in Massachusetts, while 22,000—a comparatively large number—were born in Virginia. Therefore the descendants of the Knickerbockers are wofully outnumbered in population if not in money and real estate.

The Bishop and the Waffles.

It would indeed be a queer bishop who could not tell a good story on himself. The late Bishop Dudley of Kentucky was wont to relate with much relish an interesting experience which he once had in connection with waffles.

At a fine old Virginia homestead where he was a frequent guest the waffles were always remarkably good.

One morning, as breakfast drew near an end, the tidy little linen-coated black boy who served at table approached Bishop Dudley and asked in a low voice:

"Bishop, won't y' have 'n'er waffle?"

"Yes," said the genial Bishop, "I believe I will."

"Dey ain' no mo'," then said the nice little black boy.

"Well," exclaimed the surprised reverend gentleman, "if there aren't any more waffles, what made you ask me if I wanted another one?"

"Bishop," exclaimed the little black boy, "you's done et ten a'ready, an' I thought y' wouldn' want no mo'."—Emma Carleton, in Lippincott's.

Time.

Time a thief? No, never!
Time's an honest wight,
Gracious, tender, clever,
Far from dark affright.
What he takes is taken
Not in wrath and gloom;
For the fruit that's shaken,
Other fruit will bloom!

For the raven tresses
And the fire of youth,
Children's soft caresses—
Fair exchange, i' sooth!
For ambition's pleasure,
In the days of dearth
Wisdom comes to measure
What ambition's worth!

For the hasty learning
And ill tempered zeal,
Tolerance discerning
Time will us reveal!
For the sole reliance,
Bruited loud abroad,
On the strength of science,
Comes the thought of God!

For the shining morning
Of the pleasant day,
Eve, with its adorning,
White and pearl and gray;
For the rays of sunshine
At the morning's bars,
Come (how more than one shine!)
Night's unnumbered stars!

Whitebait Are Really Baby Fish.

Whitebait, named rogenia alba by Valenciennes, the French naturalist, who held that it is a distinct genus of the herring family, was regarded by later authorities as merely the fry of the herring. It seems now, however, to be established that the fry of all the British clupeidoe—the pilchard, the sprat, and the shad—and probably other small fry, are taken and used under the name whitebait.

These delicate and silvery baby fish are taken in great abundance in spring and summer in the estuary of the Thames. They are caught in bag nets, which are sunk four or five feet below the surface of the water, and usually measure from an inch to three inches in length. A sample of whitebait has been tested by development in an aquarium, proving that they are fry of several sorts of fish.

Plausible Theory.

The great detective had been summoned to the plumber's office.

"I can't understand it," said the plumber. "The young man has been in my employ for the last three years and I have always found him honest and trustworthy. But three days ago I sent him to collect a bill in the suburbs and he has failed to show up since. Now, what do you think of that?"

"Oh," replied the g. d., "I don't think you have any cause for alarm. He was probably paid in small bills and is still counting the money to make sure that the amount is correct."

Doubt Word of American.

Referring to the fact that an American in England had said that for less than a penny a mile one may travel on an English railway in a compartment nearly equal to the American Pullman or parlor car, the London Globe says that a large force of private detectives has been set to work to try to discover which railroad the American was speaking of.

WANTED HIS STOMACH FILLED

With a bunch of Ottawa people who took in the Topeka state fair the other day were a visiting missionary and an old gentleman who was very deaf, and who had never seen a bill of fare used in a hotel.

The preacher took occasion to distribute a variety of religious tracts through the coaches, and the old gentleman, being unable to take part in the conversation, acquired a collection of the literature and assiduously perused it throughout the trip. He was fairly well sated with religious lore on arriving at his destination.

The first care of the hungry excursionists on reaching the capital city was to secure dinner, and they repaired in a body to one of the principal hotels. The old gentleman was obviously out of his class. It was evident that he was a little bewildered by the unfamiliar usages of a modern hotel, but he made his way with the others through tthe fair-time press and secured a seat at one of the tables.

He appeared to be surprised as he seated himself. "'Pears like we're too early—there ain't no vittles on the table," he remarked to a companion. As he didn't hear the reply it is unnecessary to repeat it here.

"Order, sir," perfunctorily jerked an overworked waiter, pausing behind him and submitting the printed menu. His voice was inaudible to the man with the auricular handicap, who contemptuously waved the paper aside.

Puzzled, the knight of the tray passed on, and shortly had an appetizing array of viands spread on both flanks and opposite to our friend so unfortunately ignorant of the conventions.

To the sensation of hunger was added a growing measure of wrath as the old man noted the astonishing fact that everybody in the room but himself appeared to be supplied with food. He began to glare, and, his condition being suddenly discovered by the head waiter, that functionary struck the flag of dignity and hastened to personally attend to the neglected guest.

"Your order, sir!"

And again a bill of fare was thrust before the exasperated old gentleman.

The latter grasped it and tore it up. Then he roared:

"Blast your infernal tract! I don't want to read; I want something to eat!"—Kansas City Journal.

EXPERIENCES OF A NATURALIST

Richard Bell in his new book, "My Strange Pets," tells of the solan geese, which in Great Britain in bygone days, used to be salted and dried for human food: "Many years ago these dried geese found their way to the lowlands of Scotland and were used as an appetizer. A small portion, when eaten before meals, was supposed to tickle the appetite. In this connection I have heard a good story. A worthy farmer in the neighborhood gave a dinner party and when the dinner was in progress he asked one of his guests if he would have 'another portion,' upon which the guest remarked, 'I think I will, as I et a bit o' solan goose afore I left hame and it has made me very hungry,' upon which his neighbor said: 'I dinna believe in these solan geese, for I et a haill yin afore I cam' awa' and I dinna feel a bit the hungrier.'"

A correspondent of Mr. Bell's gives the following information about one of his favorite specimens: "The South American boas are most easily tamed. My present boa, which I have had about two years, invariably sleeps in my bed, round my feet. He is perfectly clean, lies still and very seldom disturbs me; occasionally he crawls to my face to lick it. I frequently take the python to bed, but at present she is timid and if she cannot find my feet in the night becomes scared and walks out of bed, curling herself on the floor. The evil result is that she becomes cold."

Of the plague of caterpillars that overran the Scottish lowlands in 1885: "The caterpillars marched in armies straight ahead and the consequence was that when they encountered 'sheep drains'—which are open drains about eighteen inches deep and eighteen inches wide at the top—they tumbled into them in such numbers that their dead bodies dammed up the water and they might have been taken out in barrow loads."

NEWSBOY HAD HIS REVENGE

"Did it ever strike you that when it comes to waiting for revenge a newsboy, the same apparently impatient little street gamin, is the most patient being on earth?" remarked the one who was pulling at the cheroot. "Well, I'm here to tell you that it is so, and you'll believe it when you hear this story," he continued. "In my town there used to be one of the crustiest old bachelors that ever lived. Some people said he was a miser, but whether that was so I don't know. At any rate, he was the stingiest ever.

"One morning he bought a paper from a newsboy and handed him a coin. It was a ten-cent piece, and the boy didn't look at it, but pocketed it and turned away. The old fellow waited for his nine cents and suddenly saw the boy darting across the street to dispose of another paper. He called a policeman and had the little fellow arrested for the theft of the nine cents. The boy explained that he hadn't noticed that the old fellow gave him a dime. But it availed him nothing. Through the influence exerted by his accuser the boy was sent to the house of correction for two months. He swore vengeance on the old man and about eighteen months later his opportunity came.

"It was during a heavy rainstorm. The streets were veritable rivers and at one corner barefooted newsboys had constructed a walk over boxes. Among the boys was our little friend and among the crowd at the corner waiting to pass was the crusty old bachelor. The old fellow started to cross, the boy saw him and immediately recognized him. Stooping for a second he moved one of the planks. When the old man stepped on this plank it slipped from him and he was given a splendid ducking. 'I'm even wid dat guy,' grinned the boy. 'Now I'm layin' for de judge dat sent me up.'"—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

GROCER WAS TOO LITERAL

Back in the sixties Joe Wilcox was well known in southern Worcester county as a joker who never let the other fellow get the best of him. From his farm in Sutton he went to a Millbury grocer to trade eggs for groceries. Joe prided himself on having larger eggs than any other man in the circuit, and he thought they were worth more than the smaller kind.

He asked the grocer if he could not give him a little better than the market price for his basket of eggs, on account of the size. The grocer gave him a frozen stare, as he remarked in icy tones: "No, sir, an egg is an egg in this store."

"All right," said Joe, "I'll remember that in future."

The grocer forgot the incident in an hour, but not so the Sutton farmer. He left the store with the determination to get square, and he did later. He went all over three towns hunting for bantam eggs, and when he had collected about a bushel of them he went to the same store, and, leaving the eggs in his wagon, asked the market price.

The price was all right, and he bought enough goods to come to the price of the eggs he had, taking the precaution to get the goods in his wagon before he took the eggs into the store.

Finally he walked into the store with his basket of eggs and set it in front of the grocer, who looked at the eggs and swore, saying they would not go in that store.

Joe winked at him and replied: "Guess they'll have to go. They happen to be all I have this time, and you know 'an egg is an egg in this store,' so if I was you I'd treat on cigars and keep mum on this deal."—Boston Herald.

FASCINATION OF THE DESERT

The Sahara is not at all as popular belief pictures it, a vast plain of moving sand, dotted here and there with fertile oases, somewhat like a leopard's skin, says Scribner's. From Tunis westward it is a vast depression of sand and clay not much above sea level, in some parts perfectly level, in others hilly, with low depressions containing water saltier than the sea, which generally evaporates, leaving a coating of brilliant crystals, which appear like snow in the distance.

The rivers from the Aures mountains on the north serve to irrigate the oases of the Ziban; sometimes they flow above the surface, but often below it. There is a fascination about the desert that is indescribable and which none can understand unless they have spent several weeks with a caravan. At times the heat is very great, but being perfectly dry, it does not enervate as our humid atmosphere does at a temperature 40 degrees lower. Near midday the desert appears to be a molten sea of dazzling, vibrating light. Now and then the mirage appears and the tired eyes of the stranger are refreshed with visions of beautiful lakes near the horizon, even sometimes of trees and moving caravans. Alas! this is a case where seeing is not believing: After many disappointments of this kind, the camels suddenly raise their heads and snuff the air through their curiously formed nostrils and move at a quicker pace, instinct telling them that water is near. In the far distance a low black line indicated palm trees, and in a few hours the oasis of Sidi Okba appeared, distinctly relieving the doubts of those who feared it was only a mirage. Our dragoman kicked off his slippers and climbed very nimbly up a fine palm to get some of the luscious fruit growing at the top.

The Better for Hobbies.

All men, whether married or single, are the better for having hobbies. Without a pleasant recreation to which to turn in their hours of leisure, men become a bore to themselves, a nuisance to their families, and if they do not kill time by getting into mischief, they deteriorate into carping, prying, fault-finding, petty busybodies.

TRAVEL WITHIN THE REACH OF ALL

Have you longed to ... when it ... mean to stand in the ... place of ... earth? Travel, with ... possibilities ... and education ... now presents ... for men of modest ... as well as ... fortunate few, by means of the Underwood Travel System.

This system is ... of the travel kind, yet it does not ... either ship ... railroad. Such ... ment is so extraordinary as to seem ... first unbelievable, but many have proved its truth. To experience sensations of pleasure or pain at the presence of famous objects and places which inspire thoughts and produce states of feeling exciting life and adding to happiness ... to travel truly. By making use of a simple scientific principle, and applying ... twenty years in its development, there has been perfected the means of actually securing right in one's home these very experiences and benefits which actual travel gives.

Dr. James H. Breasted, of Chicago University, says: "By this means the joys of travel are extended to that large class of our people who thirst for an acquaintance with the distant lands of other ages, but are prevented by the expense involved, or by the responsibilities of home, business or profession."

More information about this truly remarkable system, and strong endorsements of it by hundreds of our greatest educators, can be had by addressing

Brighter Prospects

We have ... many actual photographs ... of cotton fields on which no fertilizer were used and pictures of fields on which "other makes" of fertilizer were used. Results of these crops were dismal failures. There are much "brighter prospects" ahead for the progressive farmers of the South. Two and three bales to the acre are only ordinary yields where are used with proper cultivation. Make your cotton mature early, and thus escape the boll weevils and other damaging insects. You can easily do this, as well as increase the number of bolls (and their size) on your plants by plentifully using Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers. This method will tremendously "increase your yields per acre." Don't be fooled into buying a substitute.

Virginia-Carolina Fertilizers

Millions Secreted by the Mutual Life Insurance Company.

HENDRICKS MUST EXPLAIN IT

Superintendent of Insurance to Be Questioned Regarding His Statements as to Misleading Circular Sent Out by Empire Life — Hughes Merciless in Exposing Loose Methods of His Office

New York City.—Gross irregularities in the treasury department of the Mutual Life Insurance Company, involving the concealment of millions of profits and losses from securities by carrying them to the profit and loss account and then distributing them in the books to the real estate accounts in this city, Boston, Philadelphia and some of the foreign cities where the company had buildings, were unearthed by the Armstrong Committee. Stephen Smith, Second Assistant Treasurer of the company, admitted that there had been such juggling with the finances, and Charles F. Prelier, Assistant Auditor, said he had made the deceptive entries under instructions, he thought, from Robert A. Granniss, Vice-President. The climax came when Chief Examiner Vanderpoel of the State Insurance Department admitted he knew this juggling had been going on for years; that he had done nothing to stop it, and did not think it worth while to report it to Superintendent Hendricks. It is believed this and many other admissions made by Vanderpoel will result in his losing his position and hasten the retirement of Granniss from the Vice-Presidency of the Mutual Life. Frederic Cromwell, the Treasurer, has announced his intention of quitting at the end of the year.

There is a discrepancy between the record of the Armstrong Committee and the testimony of Superintendent of Insurance Hendricks which he may be requested to correct, because on its face it shows that when the Superintendent swore that the deceptive circulars of the Empire Life Insurance Company never had been called to his attention he was in error, to say the least. Several days ago letters from Mr. Hendricks to Dr. George Sanders, of No. 244 East Sixty-first street, this city, were put in evidence. They related to a policy in the Empire Life which had been held by the doctor's father, Edwin Sanders, of No. 11 Broadway. Dr. Sanders said he sent to the Insurance Department full particulars in relation to the misleading circulars issued by the company, and told the Superintendent of the false pretenses from which his father had suffered. In a letter written by Hendricks to Dr. Sanders on July 1, 1905, this appears, and is of record:

"The card you have sent us is misleading, as it takes credit as a contingent asset for $10,100 of funds called for, and does not carry as a liability any of the $45,000 odd of matured mortuary liabilities outstanding on the above date. We shall address the company in reference thereto."

When Preller, the Assistant Auditor, admitted the juggling and said the work of concealment was done under instructions Charles E. Hughes began prodding him to ascertain from whom the instructions for the so-called "adjustments" came. At first Preller said he thought they came from Richard A. McCurdy, President, or from Granniss, Vice-President, but when Mr. Hughes pinned him down he said he thought they had been issued by Granniss. He testified afterward that written instructions had been issued by both McCurdy and Granniss, and these were produced in evidence. It is possible Granniss may be called next week to explain these peculiar transactions which passed muster before Chief Examiner Vanderpoel.

Former Superintendent of Insurance Louis F. Payn, who has been mentioned so prominently in connection with the Mutual Reserve troubles, was subpoenaed to testify, and appeared in City Hall. His examination was postponed.

Further evidence showing the inefficiency and negligence of the State Insurance Department in its examination of insurance companies was obtained from Vanderpoel and Second Deputy Superintendent Henry D. Appleton. It was shown that Vanderpoel not only had not examined the companies in detail with the idea of uncovering extravagance and crookedness which did not endanger the solvency of the companies, but that, in the case of the Mutual Life, he was lauded by the chief for having made a complete examination of all the details. A certificate to that effect was given to the company for use for advertising purposes, whereas, Vanderpoel admitted he had not gone into an examination of the details of the business of the company.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

Women Among Czar's Spies.

Some of the most valuable and least suspected spies that guard the czar are women of high rank, who frequent the aristocratic salons of Petersburg and Moscow, and even go as far afield as the Siberian cities of Tomsk, Tobolsk and Irkutsk.

There are also spies among the imperial Guards, and for these men the entire army and reserves of imperial Russia are ransacked. Among them one finds men from the Don and Dnieper Cossacks, the Mohammedan forces from Kazan, the Caucasian provinces, and even from far Kashgar in Central Asia, as well as from the Imperial Probrajensky and Pavlovski guards. The unquestioning and doglige fidelity of these men is wonderful, says Harper's Weekly. They are absolutely fearless, of great physical strength, and mentally of unusual acumen and foresight. There are nearly one thousand of these military guards constantly employed and about the park and palace of Tsarskoe-Selo.

One might suppose that the Emperor Nichols would sleep peacefully, surrounded by this amazing human network of protection. Yet revolutionists penetrate the royal apartments, and leave letters of sinister menace and warning which must often suggest to the unhappy monarch that it might be as well for him to do away with this far-reaching system of espionage and mingle freely with his people.

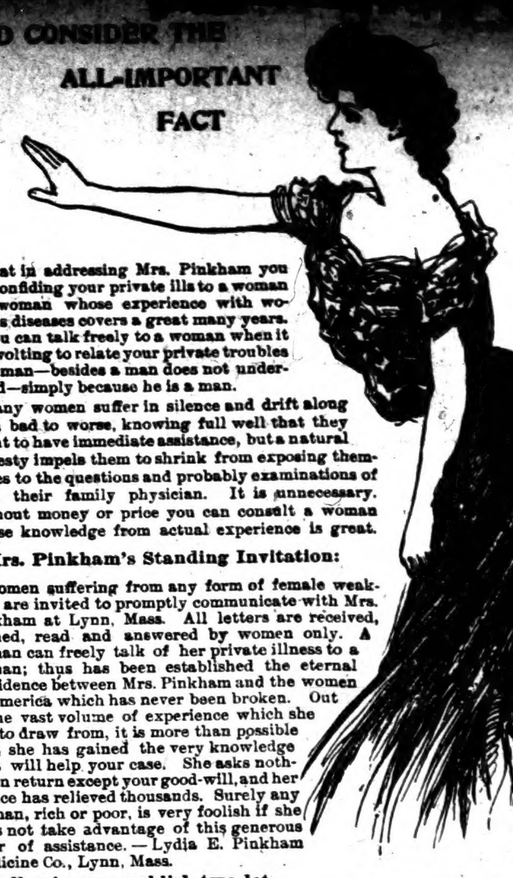
AND CONSIDER THE ALL-IMPORTANT FACT



That in addressing Mrs. Pinkham you are confiding your private ills to a woman—a woman whose experience with woman's diseases covers a great many years.

You can talk freely to a woman when it is revolting to relate your private troubles to a man—besides a man does not understand—simply because he is a man.

Many women suffer in silence and drift along from bad to worse, knowing full well that they ought to have immediate assistance, but a natural modesty impels them to shrink from exposing themselves to the questions and probably examinations of even their family physician. It is unnecessary. Without money or price you can consult a woman whose knowledge from actual experience is great.

Mrs. Pinkham's Standing Invitation:

Women suffering from any form of female weakness are invited to promptly communicate with Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass. All letters are received, opened, read and answered by women only. A woman can freely talk of her private illness to a woman; thus has been established the eternal confidence between Mrs. Pinkham and the women of America which has never been broken. Out of the vast volume of experience which she has to draw from, it is more than possible that she has gained the very knowledge that will help your case. She asks nothing in return except your good-will, and her advice has relieved thousands. Surely any woman, rich or poor, is very foolish if she does not take advantage of this generous offer of assistance.—Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass.

Following we publish two letters from a woman who accepted this invitation. Note the result.

First letter.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"For eight years I have suffered something terrible every month with my periods. The pains are excruciating and I can hardly stand them. My doctor says I have ovarian and womb trouble, and I must go through an operation if I want to get well. I do not want to submit to it if I can possibly help it. Please tell me what to do. I hope you can relieve me."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, 59th and E. Capitol Sts., Benning P. O., Washington, D. C.

Second letter.

"Dear Mrs. Pinkham:—

"After following carefully your advice, and taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I am very anxious to send you my testimonial, that others may know their valueand what you have done for me.

"As you know, I wrote you that my doctor said I must have an operation or I could not live. I then wrote you, telling you my ailments. I followed your advice and am entirely well. I can walk miles without an ache or a pain, and I owe my life to you and to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I wish every suffering woman would read this testimonial and realize the value of writing to you and your remedy."—Mrs. Mary Dimmick, 59th and E. Capitol Streets, Benning P. O., Washington, D. C.

When a medicine has been successful in restoring to health so many women whose testimony is so unquestionable, you cannot well say, without trying it, "I do not believe it will help me." If you are ill, don't hesitate to get a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound at once, and write Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., for special advice—it is free and always helpful.

"Order, sir," perfunctorily jerked an overworked waiter, pausing behind him and submitting the printed menu. His voice was inaudible to the man with the auricular handicap, who contemptuously waved the paper aside.

Puzzled, the knight of the tray passed on, and shortly had an appetizing array of viands spread on both flanks and opposite to our friend so unfortunately ignorant of the conventions.

To the sensation of hunger was added a growing measure of wrath as the old man noted the astonishing fact that everybody in the room but himself appeared to be supplied with food. He began to glare, and, his condition being suddenly discovered by the head waiter, that functionary struck the flag of dignity and hastened to personally attend to the neglected guest.

"Your order, sir!"

And again a bill of fare was thrust before the exasperated old gentleman.

The latter grasped it and tore it up. Then he roared:

"Blast your infernal tract! I don't want to read; I want something to eat!"—Kansas City Journal.

"It was during a heavy rainstorm. The streets were veritable rivers and at one corner barefooted newsboys had constructed a walk over boxes. Among the boys was our little friend and among the crowd at the corner waiting to pass was the crusty old bachelor. The old fellow started to cross, the boy saw him and immediately recognized him. Now and then the mirage appears and the tired eyes of the stranger are refreshed with visions of beautiful lakes near the horizon, even sometimes of trees and moving caravans. Alas! this is a case where seeing is not believing. After many disappointments of this kind, the camels suddenly raise their heads and snuff the air through their curiously formed nostrils and move at a quicker pace, instinct telling them that water is near. In the far distance a low black line indicated palm trees, and in a few hours the oasis of Sidi Okba appeared, distinctly relieving the doubts of those who feared it was only a mirage. PASTOR C. T. RUSSELL.

Subject: Centre of the Divine Revelation is Jesus Christ.

Providence, R. I.—Pastor C. T. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., preached twice here Sunday in Infantry Hall to large audiences. His evening discourse follows:

The Bible may be said to be a revelation of Jesus, who in turn is a revelation of the Father. Its opening pages tell us of the fall of the first human son of God, Adam, point to the death penalty upon him, and indicate the need of a Saviour and Redeemer; and, more than this, inferentially promise such a one as the seed of the woman who ultimately shall bruise the serpent's head—crush, subdue all evil. Its intermediate pages are prophecies and types respecting Jesus and the work He would accomplish as a Redeemer, and later as a deliverer of the race. And further on it records His birth, His ministries, His death, resurrection, glorification, and the massages He gave to all who would become His followers, including His promise to come again and receive them unto Himself. The closing pages of the Bible picture in symbolical language the completion of the present age, the inauguration of the millennial age, the work that it will accomplish in the blessing and uplifting of the human family and the ultimate purging of the earth from all sin, imperfection, evil, when every voice in heaven and earth shall be heard praising the Lord.

The teachings of higher criticism are very misleading on this subject. They would have us consider that all miracles are impossible; that our Lord was not born of a virgin, and by the direct power of God; that He was born as other men; that He happened to be a rather superior type of man; that He never had a prehuman existence. The Scriptures teach to the contrary of this most explicitly, that "He left the glory which He had with the Father before the world was;" that "He who was rich for our sakes became poor," taking a human form for a particular, specific purpose — "for the suffering of death," that He might be our Redeemer. (John xvii, 5; II. Cor. viii., 9; Heb. ii., 9).

The inspired writers go further and declare, "All things were made by Him, and without Him was not one thing made that was made." The context tells us that He was in the beginning with the Father, and was the Word, or mouthpiece, and personal representative of the Father in all the work of the creation of all the remainder of the works of God.

We should note in passing the consistency of the Scriptures in respect to the supremacy of Jehovah God. From first to last with one voice the Scriptures declare that there is but one supreme in the universe.

How comes it then that the record is that Jesus, our Master, in His prehuman condition, was the logos, a God with the God? Is this testimony out of accord with the remainder of scriptural testimony? We answer, No! The name Jehovah was never permitted to any but the one, the Father supreme; but the title God, which in the Hebrew is Elohim, and sometimes abbreviated El, signifies a mighty one, and might be applied to any mighty one in authority and power, Jehovah Himself being superior to all Elohim.

An examination of the scriptural uses of the word Elohim substantiates the foregoing. We find, for instance, that it has not only been applied to the Father and to the special representative and prime minister, the logos, the Son of God manifest in the flesh, but we find also that the word is used in respect to angels when they directly represented the Lord as His special messengers, they who are His mighty ones. We find also that this title Elohim was used in respect to angels when they directly represented the Lord as His special messengers, they who are His mighty ones. We find also this title Elohim was used in respect to the first elders of Israel when God recognized them as His representatives in judging their brethren.

It will be remembered that the Jews were angry with our Lord Jesus, not because He called Himself Jehovah or intimated any usurpation of the Father's place, honors or prerogatives, but simply because He called Himself the Son of God and referred to Jehovah God as His Father. On one occasion when they were about to stone Him Jesus inquired why, and the answer was that in calling Himself the Son of God He was affecting to be superior to them and to others of mankind, and affecting a relationship with the great Jehovah, which they termed blasphemy, because they said it was affecting an equality with Jehovah; but our Lord contradicted that thought and pointed out to them that the claim to be the Son of God was not to put Himself on an equality with Jehovah, but that the Scriptures fully sanctioned such a title as the Son of God.

The Jews never claimed the title Sons of God for themselves, nor would it have been proper for them to have done so. Not until the great sacrifice for sins was offered by the Redeemer could the Father so justify any members of the fallen race as to receive them back into the close, the dear relationship represented by the word Son, but, since the redemptive work of Jesus, spiritual Israelites are termed sons of God, as the Apostle declares, "Now are we the sons of God, though it doth not yet appear what we shall be (how great our glory and exaltation in the resurrection change), but we know that when He shall appear (our Lord and Master, the only begotten Son) we shall be like Him and see Him as He is." (I. John, iii., 2). The Scriptures clearly show that the followers of Christ were accepted of the Father as sons when begotten of the Spirit at Pentecost and since. (John, i., 12 13).

The divine announcement of our Lord Jesus before His birth was, "Thou shalt call His name Jesus. He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David; and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there shall be no end." In explanation of His miraculous birth we read, "The power of the highest [illegible] Christ Jesus before His birth, and this title He continually approved, saying: "As the Father hath sent Me, even so send I you." "I came not into the world to do Mine own will, but the will of Him that sent Me." "The Father worketh hitherto and (now) I work." (John, xx., 21; John, ivs., 34, v. 17).

Let us look back and note the scriptural declaration to the effect that the logos, who subsequently became the man Christ Jesus, was the beginning of the creation of God. These are our Lord's own words and are in full accord with the Apostle Paul's statement that our Lord is the image of the invisible God, the first-born of every creature (more literally, the first born of all creation), for by Him were all things created that are in heaven and that are in earth, visible and invisible. * * * all things were created by Him and for Him, and He was before all things and by Him all things consist.

Our Lord Himself pointed out to us that it is the heavenly Father's will that we should honor the Son as we honor the Father—also that we should recognize Him as the Father's representative, through whom He is working all things according to the counsel of His own will. The Apostle explains to us that although our Lord occupied the chief position next to the Father before He came into the world to be our Redeemer, yet He now occupies a still higher position. He tells us that He was obedient to the Father and humbled Himself even unto death, even the death of the cross.

Although the reformers did valiant service in dispelling much of the gross darkness and in lifting the true light of God's Word, they evidently overlooked the fallacy called the Trinity. But we have in the Bible the standard authority by which the reformers were guided, and it is our duty as well as our privilege to hear what the Lord God hath spoken upon this subject and to conform our faith thereto. The Scriptures do indeed teach, as we have seen, that there is an Almighty One, "The God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ." (Romans, xv., 6). They do also teach that the only begotten Son of God, highly exalted by the Father, is to be reverenced even as we reverence the Father; also that the Scriptures do teach that there is a Holy Spirit of God, which, proceeding from the Father and from the Son, is also to be the Spirit of the sanctified church.

But some one inquires in astonishment: Is not the doctrine of the Trinity particularly set forth in the Bible? We answer, No. Everything as we have shown is to the contrary; the word Trinity, trinitarian, etc., is not to be found, even in our common version of the Bible, which was made by those who held this as the scriptural position and who would have been glad to thus translate any Hebrew or Greek word if they had found any such word capable of such translation.

The few of our day who would stand up in defense of the unreasonable proposition that we have three gods equal in power and glory, and yet that the three in some incomprehensible manner are one in person, would like to use the one text of Scripture which has defended this absurdity for centuries, but which all scholars now agree with no part of the original writings, but was added about the seventeenth century, at the time when this doctrine of the Trinity, by persecution, had forced itself into the place of full control.

The passage referred to is omitted in the revised version of the Bible, although all the members of the committee were professedly trinitarians in their views. They were too conscientious to give further publicity to that which was recognized as a fraudulent interpolation intended to deceive and to support the trinitarian view. The words not in the original, added in the seventh century — not found in any Scriptures of earlier date than the seventh century—you should note in your Testament by striking them out, namely, beginning with the words, "in heaven, the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost, and these three are one. And there are three that bear witness in earth." If those fraudulent words be stricken out the passage reads as it did originally, with beautiful simplicity and clearness, "There are three that bear records, the Spirit, the water and the blood, and these three agree in one (testimony)."

The absurdity of the passage as it stands in the common version can be seen at a glance. The interpolation would make the passage say that the Father, the Word and the Holy Ghost all three are one, and that they are bearing record in heaven that Jesus is the Son of God. How unreasonable to suppose that such a witnessing in heaven should be necessary. Do not the angels know that Jesus is the Son of God? Why, then, the statement that the Father, the Son and the Holy Ghost are witnessing in heaven that Jesus is the Son of God? Every interpolation, and we are glad that they are few, marks itself as an absurdity, and cannot be harmonized with the inspired portions of the Word. This is a further evidence to us that the Scriptures as given by God are of divine inspiration, and that nothing should be added to them nor taken from them. Evidently, however, it is the duty of every child of God to erase from his Bible any portion, such as this one, that may be found to be an addition, not the words of the inspired apostles.

This passage would not suggest to any reasonable mind that the Father and the Son are one in person were it not that this false doctrine has beclouded judgment on the subject. There are more ways of being one than merely personally one. Our Lord's words elsewhere explain His meaning here. Praying to the Father for His followers He said, after praying for His apostles, "Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also who will believe on Me through their word, that they all may be one as Thou, Father, art in Me and I in Thee, that they may be one in us." (John xvii., 20-21). Here is the sense of oneness between the Father and the Son, oneness of spirit, oneness of purpose—not oneness of person.

INTERNATIONAL LESSON COMMENTS FOR DECEMBER 31.

Review of the Lessons for the Last Quarter of the Year — Read Psalm cxxvi — Golden Text, Psa. ixv., 11 — Summaries.

Lesson 1. Topic: Divine judgment against sin. Place: Babylon. Belshazzar, only sixteen or seventeen years old, was the ruling king in the city of Babylon. In his drunken folly and wickedness he called for the golden and silver vessels which had been taken from the temple at Jerusalem that he might drink from them as a token that his gods had given victory over the God of the Jews. During this profane revelry a hand appeared and wrote upon the wall. This filled the king with fears, and he declared that the wise man who should interpret the meaning should be clothed with scarlet and have a chain of gold and be third ruler in the kingdom. When all had failed, the queen, mother of Belshazzar, came in and persuaded her son to send for Daniel, to whom, when he came, the king repeated his promise made to the wise men.

II. Topic: Divine deliverance of the righteous. Place: Babylon. Daniel's enemies knew that he was accustomed to pray to his God, and they were assured that no decree and no danger could stop him, and by foul means they could secure his sentence to be thrown in the den of lions. His character was a constant reproof. They persuaded the king to make a decree that no one should ask a favor of God or of man except of the king himself for a month, on penalty of being cast among the lions.

III. Topic: Gracious life providences. Places: Babylon and Jerusalem. When the Jews from Jerusalem were led captive by Nebuchadnezzar, Babylon was the world kingdom. In the year B. C. 538 the Medo-Persian kingdom arose under Cyrus and conquered Babylonia. Things went better with the captives. But a change of government was not the only help, for the prophets warned and entreated the people. Ezekiel, who himself was taken captive in the second siege against Jerusalem, preached to the people upon the need of a new heart and changed life. Daniel's example and influence helped to turn the hearts of his people to God. Isaiah's prophecies gave inspiration and hope.

IV. Topic: Building the house of God. Place: Jerusalem. After a long, hard march from Babylon, a distance of 500 to 700 miles, the exiles reached Jerusalem, where they found the city in ruins as it had lain since its destruction by Nebuchadnezzar. Their first step was to rebuild the altar of sacrifice.

V. Topic: A study of the Holy Spirit. Place: Jerusalem. Zerubbabel was building the second temple at Jerusalem amid difficulties and discouragements. At this time God gave the prophet Zechariah a series of visions, that he might encourage the people. He spoke to Zerubbabel of the golden candlestick and the olive trees. He assured him that he should finish the temple.

VI. Topic: Fidelity to duty. Place: Shushan. The history contained in the book of Esther belongs in the time between the dedication of the second temple and the coming of Ezra to Judea. The great danger of the Jews, the opportunity Esther had to protect them, and the defeat of a wicked enemy all go to make up a thrilling history showing God's great love and care of His children.

VII. Topic: Vital principles in life's journeys. Places: Jerusalem and Babylonia. In this lesson we have Ezra's account of his mission to Jerusalem. By prayer and fasting he prepared for the journey. He set apart priests to have charge of the valuable vessels and money. The journey was made under God's guidance.

VIII. Topic: A study of prayer. Place: Shushan. Nehemiah was a noble example of Christian patriotism. He was a man of profound piety, connecting everything, great and small, with the will of God. His prudence was equally marked, and there is no better example of constant dependence on God united with practical forethought. He was unselfish.

IX. Topic: Self-sacrifice for the good of others. Place: Ephesus. The church in Corinth was founded in A. D. 52, 53, by Paul while on his second missionary journey. The church was a little band in a city of 400,000 inhabitants; a gem in a city of iniquity. The early training, the former habits, the surrounding influences of a city which, even in the Gentile world, was famous for drunkenness, made it difficult to live a true Christian life.

X. Topic: Important principles in life's battle. Place: Jerusalem. Nehemiah had the cause of his people at heart. He had left his position of trust to go with the despised and persecuted Jews who were struggling to protect their city by a secure wall. He established prayer among the laborers, and thus kept the work going on regardless of opposition.

XI. Topic: How to study the Bible. Place: Jerusalem. When the city was enclosed by a wall, though it had been built under great difficulties, the people turned their attention to God's word.

XII. Topic: The coming Messiah. Place: Jerusalem. The history of the Jewish nation shows how often they were allured into sin. Severe chastisements were sent upon them. They were reduced as a nation.

XIII. Topic: Vision of Christ the Messiah. Place: Jerusalem. The people of Judah were at this time under a two-fold darkness: 1. The darkness of outward trouble. 2. They were in moral darkness. But the prophet saw into the future when Christ should come and His gospel should be preached and all nations be blest.
